"In view of the continued sneering allusion that Britain is not doing her part," said Mr. Johnson, "I want to say two things. First, in a total of 475 miles of the Western front, the troops of the British Empire are holding 275 miles, or considerably more than half. They are now doing the heaviest fighting. The Belgians are holding from 20 to 30 miles, and the French the remainder.

"But, more surprising to me, in view of the frequence with which I heard Scottish troops, and Canadian troops, and Irish troops, and Australian troops mentioned, is this: England alone has put into France 15 per cent. of all the troops put there by the British Empire, and she has sustained just that proportion of the losses in killed, wounded, and captured.

"Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Canada and Australia, with a few other parts of the Empire, have furnished the remaining 25 per cent."

The more remarkable thing about the trip of the Congressmen to France and Britain was the change in the attitude of some of them. Representative Dill, of the same State as Johnson, Washington, was one of those who voted against the war declaration. He is now warning his colleagues against the dangers of a "premature peace," and urging that the last man and the last dollar must be put into the fight.

NEW YORK, Dec. 17.—More than 1,000,000 yards of aeroplane linen have been landed in this country from Belfast. This quantity is said to have arrived two weeks ago, and there is every reason to believe that the flow of this merchandise has not yet reached its end.

Mail advices from Belfast, dated late in October, referred to the distribution of government orders totalling 36,000,000 yards, with the comment that they covered not only the military requirements of Great Britain but of France and the United States as well.

The market in such sources as have been in touch with this phase of the business believes that arrangements to care for virtually all of America's needs in aircraft linens.

Limitations to the flax supply are making goods for the civilian trade verwy scarce. The formation of a flax control board by the British War Office with broad powers may foreshadow the time when the use of flax will be curtailed with a view to conserving stocks to cover war needs. At present however, importers say that all-flax goods are available in Belfast for spring delivery for any one who will pay the price. This, however, has become so extraordinarily high that the trade is turning to union and all-cotton fabrics.

You can never tell what a woman in love and a balky horse are going to do.

CURRENT COMMENT.

New York Tribune: Germany has lost the war so far as it is a military question. She cannot defeat the armies of her enemies. She can win only by corrupting the people behind the armies and portions of the armies themselves. Russian and Italian events should serve the greater end; they should be final evidences of the way, and the one way, that the war may be lost. If they do not serve this end they may yet prove a beginning of defeat rather than the high-water marks of the latest and most dangerous of all German campaigns.

New York World: The fundamental condition of adequate railroad revenue and credit is not government credit, but adequate railroad rates. The commission is charged by law to allow adequate rates or "an adequate annual return," but it has dawdled over that issue all summer long without being able to decide anything until now the situation is concededly out of hand.

PRESS COMMENT ON THE NAVY REPORT.

"Found Public Attuned To It."

Pittsburg Post: The optimism of Secretary Daniels in his annual report on the Navy found the public attuned to it. There never has been a doubt in the American mind about the bravery and nubility of its sea fighters, and there is satisfaction as well with the progress in enlarging the Navy."

"A Remarkable Achievement."

New York Times: "Never has Secretary Daniels made a more satisfactory annual statement that the report published to-day. If the note he sounds seems jubilant and optimistic there are reasons for it. The expansion of the Navy has been a remarkable achievement, and its performance in eight months of war proves what Mr. Daniels maintains, that it was ready for duty."

THE War Charities Act, 1917, defines "war charities" as follows: any fund, institution or association, other than a church or the Salvation Army, whether established before or after the commencement of this Act, having for its objects or among its objects the relief of suffering or distress, or the supplying of needs or comforts to sufferers from the war, or to soldiers, returned soldiers or their families or dependents, or any other charitable purpose connected with the present European war. Britain Has Won, Rather Than Lost, Says Tirpitz

Tells Hamburg Audience That With the "Arch Enemy" Uncrushed, Peace Based on Status Quo Ante Is Impossible For Germany

THE FINAL DECISION

AMSTERDAM, Dec. 19.— The German newspapers contain long accounts of the speech of Grand Admiral von Tirpitz before the Hamburg branch of the fatherland party, in which the admiral said:

"Up to the present in this war Great Britain has won rather than lost. Peace based on the status quo ante or on renunciation, therefore, is out of the question for Germany."

With refernce to the report that Germany would give up Zeebrugge and Ostend if the British evacuated Calais, Von Tirpitz said:

"The evacuation of Calais would never be equivalent to the loss of such first class security. Moreover, the Channel tunnel will become a fact after the war. For real security we should have, besides Flanders and Antwerp, Calais and Boulogne. The report in question is a screen behind which the question of Flanders might be permitted to disappear.

"The pretext that we cannot coerce Great Britain and America falls to the ground when we consider the growing scarcity of the cargo space of our ruthless arch enemy. The time for final decision will come when real distress begins to take the place of merely threatening distress. That time will come. It is only a question of keeping cool."

THE NIGHT SHIFTS AT SHEFFIELD

One of the World's Greatest Munition Factories

BY DOUGLAS ROBERTSON

(Special Correspondent of the Empire Press Union).

SHEFFIELD, Dec. 18.—Red flames are spurting from the tops of tall chimneys which loom ghostly through the murkiness. Dull of glow of forges, furnaces and tens of thousands of lamps shoot searchlight rays into the fumes and vapour. Surely a tempting target for the night-flying Hun! But, no, the dense pall of smoke which forever hangs over this scene of industry makes a screen, a sort of sky camouflage, enveloping the entire works. Overhead the skies reflect no fiery radiance. The brightest beams are soon quenched in that dark cloud. And furthermore, should the midnight murderers venture thus far afield, presto! Snuffed is every lamp, darkened every stack and furnace, and, on the instant, this myriad luminosity is swallowed up in Egyptian darkness.

Can this indeed be the gateway of Gehenna! A large door has suddenly opened, a blinding light, a scorching heat shoots forth which sends the visitors staggering backwards, hands to their faces. Well might it be the Pit of Tophet. Imps armed with long, iron rods prance at the door of this fiery furnace and drag forth in triumph a block of white-hot steel some five by ten by fifteen feet in volume. The temperature of the place shoots up ten degrees.

ROLLING ARMOUR-PLATE.

Then two Titanic arms of steel drop down from the roof, and, clutching the ingot, hauls its sizzling bulk over steel rollers set in a floor of steel, under a monster press. Such is the rolling mill, which, squashing and squeezing the block until flames gush forth from innumerable little fissures, moves it backwards and forwards. Toughened tremendously by such a mauling the mass of metal is finally rolled flat into plates of from two to fifteen inches in thickness—armour-plate able to withstand the heaviest shells. Great warships are clothed in as much as 6,000 tons of this protection.

"Look out!!" shouts one of the imps advancing with a bundle of dry bunches, which he tosses on top of the fiery ingot. "Happen you'll think a bee stung you if a spark of yon gets down your neck."

A crackling, a roar of flames, and clouds of smoke as of a bush fire in the dry season fills the place as the block is rolled to and fro with this strange bonfire on its back.

"Do we drink any beer on this job?" exclaimed one of these workers, amazedly—no imp at all, but seen at close quarters a sturdy North Country man. "We do that. I'm just off for a good one right now."

ICEBERGS OF STEEL.

Come and see them pouring the molten mixture for these armour-plates—Canadian nickel and chrome steel—from the furnaces into the moulds. Men with blue goggles are hurrying about and one of them presents the visitors with lorgnettes of blue glass. White heat of 1,670 degrees centigrade blazes from the crevices of those gas-furnace doors. The naked eye winces at the glare, but throught the protecting "specs" one may gaze with impunity. The interior of the furnace they have just opened presents an extraordinary appearance. The blue glass turns it white. Like an ice cave in the polar regions it looks, like a little grotto hanging with cool stalactites. The "stalactites" are nothing but drips of white-hot metal. In the unthinkable heat of this furnace blocks of cold, hard metal melt like butter on a hot stove.

As we watch on the other side of the furnace, an attendant prises away a stopper of clay. With a burst of light and showers of brilliant white sparks, which oddly enough do not burn, out rushes a molten torrent, to pour, a fiery Niagara, into the fire-brick lined 40-ton ladle which awaits its reception. An awesome sight it is to see hardened steel reduced to liquid bubbling and tossing right below one like a kettle of jam. And as with the homely jam pot a scum of dross rises to its top.

NIGHT LIKE DAY.

It is midnight, but is might well be high noon. For the clamour of machinery rises everywhere from this mighty plant, which never slumbers. Trains puff to and fro among the acres of buildings (many of them new) which cluster thickly on an area of one hundred and twenty acres.

We have just entered another big workshop. Up among the smoke clouds in the lofty roof shine white incandescent lamps. Down at the side of every worker glows a shaded electric bulb. Hundreds of girls are here, girls in buff-coloured overalls and caps to match, toiling at lathes. They are making shell noses and fuses. Men are scattered about superintending or engaged on heavier tasks.

Daylight and a return visit to this factory of the machinery of death only serves to further reveal its vastness. The day shift is now on, and the 7,000 workers of the preceding night asleep in bed, having toiled from six in the evening until 6 a.m., with some two hours off for rest and food. Hard work, but the girls, especially look healthy and rosy. All are earning such money as they never dreamed of before. Numbers of the men get £4 a week. Mere lads draw remarkable wages, and girls get two and three times more than they could have obtained in the piping times of peace. One and all go about their tasks with an alacrity and cheerfulness which no mere thoughts of gain could confer. Have not all got loved ones in the war?

AUSTRALIAN'S BIG WAGES.

In all this host of workers so variously employed there are but few Colonials—no Canadians at all, or New Zealanders, no visible South Africans, and but a few Australians. An Australian it was who held a record here for high wages. He drew £24 a week. This sturdy son of the Southern Cross worked on screw breeches for 6 inch guns, handling these 60-pound baubles alone, and so quickly and skillfully that he was cheap at the price. But he got rich and quit.

"Yes, there's good money here," quoth another Australian, pausing at his lathe to talk to the wrier, "but (frowning a the overcast skies outside) I want to get back into the sunshine down under."

Girls, girls, everywhere girls. We see them at lathes, at the levers of ten trip-hammers, making shell-cases, filling shells with shrapnel bullets mixed with melted resin poured from kettles. Girls are often even employed in the boxes of the mammoth electric cranes, deftly manipulating the switches and levers. Think of girls thus moving tons of metal, perchance giant cannon! Is there indeed anything women cannot do?

ELECTRIC ARC THAT BLINDS.

"Don't attempt to look in that furnace door without first putting on these glasses," warns our guide, pointing to an electric furnace. "That arc flame is literally blinding. It will put one's eyes out of business. Exposure to it will render one sightless for forty eight hours, causing intense pain, with granulations which feel like grains of sand under the eye-lids."

RED-HOT CANNONS.

On through interminable shops, where motor parts are stamped out of hot blocks, where railway carriage wheels are wrought, on through armour-plate shops, into the cannon department we walk. Here guns of all shapes and sizes lie in the rough—howitzers, field guns, mortars, and immense naval cannon—in crude ingots of solid metal, some to be trimmed, bored out on lathes for delicate inner casings, and others hollowed and worked up for outer coverings.

The chief sights of the works is the tempering room for these monsters. Picture a structure whose glass roof, towering 120 feet above the earthen floor, is hid from view in the smoke which swirls about its iron rafters. Up in this dimness is a crane of great lifting capacity. Imagine a species of chimney stack sixty feet high standing within this building—an iron, fire-brick lined chimney whose side swings out on hinges, and from a crevice down whose whole length red flames issue forth, and black, sooty smoke. Suddenly the sides swing open, levered by men on engirdling fire-escapes revealing a 60-foot cannon inside, suspended by a chain and glowing cherry red. Roasted in this gas-blast furnace whose acrid fumes tickle the lungs, the mighty gun is presently lowered into a 60-ft. subterranean tank of oil immediately below the blazing stack. There are guns tempered to withstand the shocks of war.

DELICATE AS WATCHWORK.

In the finishing shop we presently see men working on the delicate mechanism of the breeches (many of these changes of the breeches of these guns, measuring to the one-thousandth part of an inch, polishing, adjusting with a watchmaker's care the all-important fiting of these mighty engines of destruction. The rifling of the bore shines like silver in that monster barrel through which a boy, giving the finishing touches as he goes, is drawn by a rope. Ere long, ton shells will be whirling through this burnished passage way on their ten-mile flight into German forts and German ships.

Such are some of the scenes at Messrs. Vickers' works in Sheffield, shown by courtesy of the management to a party of correspondents from the Overseas Dominions. And verily the sight of this industrial army is an inspiration. Here every clang of the hammers is striking a blow against despotism. Here British brawn and skill is battling against Krupp-Kaiserism. And just as British bayonets send Prussia's vaunted Guards, Wilhelm's picked troops, reeling backward even so these men and women of Britain's factories are fighting and beating those hordes in the Devil's workshops at Essen.

GRAIN MARKET

With a slight change in cash oats, showing 1 1-4c. advance, the market otherwise is steady. With the embargo still on corn on eastward-bound shipments, oats continue to hold their strong position in the market. Deliveries at country points are still light, owing to the blocked condition of roads. The car situation also hinders the movement of grains. Lowering the prices of mill feed stuffs will relieve the situation.

HUBBY! HAND THIS TO WIFE, CHORTLE SOFTLY--THEN RUN

Chicago, Ill. — Any woman can dress for any position in any Chicago society on $300 a year. The Chicago Designers' Association pronounced this to-day.

The designers' association is not an anti-feminine affair. It is composed of men who are engaged in designing women's clothes.

This year, however, thrift walks hand in hand with fashion. In addition to designing styles which will appeal to the feminine eye during the coming year the association has compiled what it considers "sane dress statistics." Following is the itemized list of how much a woman should spend on clothes a year. Mr. Husband paste it in your hat:

Three or four pairs of shoes	$20
Three or four hats	25
Ten pairs of stockings	10
One corset	5
One year's underclothing	25
One year's hairpins, buttons, ribbons, etc.	5
Spring suit	30
One sport skirt	10
Three or four shirt waists	20
Winter Suit	35
Coat	25
Three pairs of gloves	10
One party dress	30
Furs	30
Miscellaneous	10
Total	$300

This Hooverized clothing menu will dress any woman completely and fashionably, the designers' assert.

The chief source of extravagance in women's wear, Alexander Weiss of the association asserted, is the impulsiveness of the feminine mind. Desiring to appear always in the latest things, women, Mr. Weiss further charged, go forth from day to day, and accumulate closets of clothes which they could not wear out in six lifetimes.

"In the past we have tried to supply women with suits and dresses that varied each month in style and color," the designer asserted. "This year we have Hooverized on styles."

"THE FILM OF FEAR"

By ARNOLD FREDERICKS

Leary lived with his wife and two children on the third floor of a Second Avenue tenement. Hastily climbing the two flights of dark steps, Duvall rapped on the door. He was overjoyed, when it was opened by a man whom he judged to be the chauffeur himself.

"Are you Martin Leary?" he asked.

"Yes, sir." The man wiped his mouth with the back of his hand, choking down a bit of cold supper he had been eating before turning in.

"I am Richard Duvall. You drove my wife uptown, somewhere, did you not?"

"Yes, sir. To Columbus Avenue and Ninety-sixth Street, sir. Won't you come in?"

"No. There isn't time. I want you to put on your coat and come along with me. Mrs. Duvall has not returned, and I fear that something has happened to her."

The man turned and called to someone inside the flat.

"Gimme my hat and coat, Kitty," he said, then turned again to Duvall. "I suppose I should have waited, sir, but after two hours went by I made up my mind that Mrs. Duvall did not need me any longer."

"What is the building at Columbus Avenue and 96th Street?"—Duvall asked as the man pulling on the coat his wife handed him, strode down the hall.

"An apartment building, sir."

"And why did Mrs. Duvall go there?"

"Well, sir, we was following a woman, sir. She went to a hotel on Seventy-second street, and Mrs. Duvall told me to watch for her. I did and tracked her to the place at 96th street. Then I telephoned to Mrs. Duvall to come, and she did."

"What time was that?"

"About half past nine, sir."

"All right. Go on."

"Mrs. Duvall came, sir, in another taxi. I pointed out the place where the woman went in, and Mrs. Duvall went in after her. She didn't say I was to wait, but I guess she expected me to, because she had sent the other cab away. I waited for over two hours, and then, when she didn't come out, I supposed that she had returned to her hotel, so I came back, too. She wasn't there, though. That is why I left the note."

"How did you think Mrs. Duvall could have gotten back to the hotel if you were watching the door of the apartment house all the time?"

"I wasn't watching it all the time sir. I went into the drug store once, sir, and got a cigar. And then later on, I went to a saloon a piece down the avenue, and got a glass of beer. Mrs. Duvall did not say I was to watch the place, sir. I thought when she got through what she had to do, she would come back to the cab. But she didn't. Do you think I ought to have waited, sir?" The man seemed greatly distressed.

"No use talking about that now," Duvall remarked, shortly. "I want to drive there at once. Get on the box with the chauffeur, and point out the place to him."

"Yes, sir." A moment later they had started on their way uptown.

Knowing as he did Grace's impetuous nature, Duvall could only conclude that her pursuit of the woman had led her into some trap. What danger she might at this moment be facing he could only surmise.

The apartment building, when they finally reached it, presented a grim and forbidding appearance. Not a light broke the darkness of any of its windows. The drug store on the opposite corner, too, was closed for the night. The whole locality was dark and silent.

"Tell the driver to stop a few doors up the block—not right in front of the building."

Leary nodded. Presently the cab stopped, and he and Duvall got out.

The detective's first move was to ascertain whether or not the building had any rear exit, by which Grace might have left, without being seen by Leary. He walked down the avenue to its rear wall, only to find that it abutted against the wall of the next building. There was no rear entrance.

If, then, Grace had not left the place during the past hour she must still be in one of the ten flats that formed the five doors of the building. But which one. That, apparently, was the problem he had to solve.

It would be useless he felt to inquire at the doors of the various apartments at this hour of the morning. Admission, at least on the part of those he sought, would certainly be refused. Yet he felt that there was no time to be lost.

Stationing Leary before the front door, with instructions to keep a careful watch, Duvall went into the vestibule, and by means of his pocket light inspected the names of the occupants of the building as Grace had done a short time before. The hallway inside was dark with the exception of a dim light at the foot of the stairs. Apparently the place boasted no elevator or hall boy service.

The ten names on the boxes in the vestibule meant nothing to him. How was it possible to determine which one was that of the woman that he sought. Weinberg — Scully — Martin — Stone — he ran down the list, trying to find out some distinguishing mark, some clue, that would guide him.

Suddenly he paused, allowing the light from his torch to rest upon the card bearing the name of one of the tenants on the fourth floor.

This card had attracted his attention, because it was different from any of the others in the two racks. They were either engraved or printed visiting cards cards stuck inside the brass frames provided for them, or the names were written or printed by hand upon blank cards. But this card, bearing simply the inscription E. W. Norman, was neither engraved nor printed, nor written by hand. On the contrary, it was type written.

This in itself at once attracted Duvall's attention, owing to the fact that the various letters received by Ruth Morton had also been typewritten. If the name Norman was an assumed one, as Duvall concluded it to be, what more natural than that it should be typewritten on a blank card especially when a regular printed or engraved card was not available; when to have it written in long hand would have been a disclosure of identity, and when, above all, the woman in question possessed, and knew how to operate, a typewriter.

There was more than this, however, about the name on the card, to convince Duvall that E. W. Norman was the woman he sought. He recalled with distinctness the two salient features of the typewriting in all the letters sent to Miss Morton, the misplaced "a," and the broken lower right-hand corner of the capital "W." He looked closely at the two letters in the name before him. The "a" was misplaced, the "W" minus its lower right-hand corner. The evidence seemed to be complete.

The next thing to be considered was how could he first obtain entrance to the apartment building, and, subsequently, to the flat of the woman posing as E. W. Norman? Were he to ring the latter's bell, he felt quite sure she would not respond by unfastening the front door, but she would on the contrary, be warned, and even if unable to escape, might destroy the evidence he hoped to find in her possession.

On the other hand to ring the bell of one of the other apartments might result in the unlatching of the front door, but might involve explanations, difficult in the circumstances, to make. There was no help for it, however. Duvall pressed the bell longing to the family named Scully.

It was a long time before there was any response. Duvall had almost begun to despair of getting one, when he heard the clicking of the electric latch, and found that he could turn the knob and enter the hallway.

He had barely done so, when a big, burly looking man, who might have been a bartender, or a head waiter, appeared in the door of one of the ground floor apartments, clad only in his night clothes.

"Well—whatcha want?" he growled.

Duvall stepped up to him quickly, and spoke in a pleasant voice.

"I'm mighty sorry," he said, "I rang your bell by mistake. Pardon me."

The man glared at him, suspicion blazing from his eyes.

"That's an old one," he retorted. "How do I know that you ain't a burglar?"

"Do I look like one?" Duvall asked.

The man ignored this question.

"Rang my bell by mistake, did you? Who do you want to see?"

"I have some business with a woman on the fourth floor." He went closer to the man, and lowered his voice. "I'm a detective, my friend," he whispered confidentially. "I'm here on a very important case."

The big man's eyes widened.

"Th' hell you are!" he exclaimed. "Central office?"

"No. Private."

"H——m." The man nodded slowly. "All right. But I guess I'll keep my eye on you just the same." He leaned against the door jamb, and watched Duvall as he ascended the stairs.

The detective reached the fourth floor at top speed. He was panting when he arrived opposite the door of the apartment that he sought. Once there he paused for a moment, listening intently. Not a sound came from the interior of the flat.

The problem of obtaining access to the place now confronted him. The door was of oak of stout construction and he doubted his ability to break it in, nor did he wish to attempt to do so, if it could be avoided. Breaking into private apartments, without a warrant, was a serious matter. There was a chance that this might not be the right place, after all. He hesitated. Yet Grace might be within, in danger, perhaps, of her life. It was imperative that he should find out the truth at once.

Stepping up to the door, he knocked sharply upon it, then waited for a reply. He scarcely expected one, but felt that he should at least give the persons within a chance.

A long silence ensued. Duvall was about to rap again, when to his amazement the door slowly and noiselessly swung inward, as though impelled by some unseen hand.

The room beyond was shrouded in darkness. Duvall could see no more. Whoever had opened the door must now be concealed behind it. No one either greeted or challenged him. The door swung three-quarters open, and stood still. Not a sound was to be heard. The room was as silent as a tomb.

Duvall stood on the threshold for a few seconds, listening intently. He was greatly astonished by what had occurred. Who had the door been so silently opened? Was someone waiting within, ready to attack him the moment he made a step forward?

Killed by Poisons
All scientists agree that poisonous products in the blood are eliminated by the kidneys and liver. The kidneys act as a kind of filter for these products. When the kidneys are changed or degenerated, by disease or old age, then these poisons are retained in the body. If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily between meals to flush the kidneys. Then procure Anuric at a drug store. This Anuric drives the uric acid out. Scientific men have learned that in gout, also rheumatism, poisonous uric acid crystals are deposited in or about the joints, in the muscles—where inflammation is set up.
If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only a little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month.
You can obtain a trial pkg. of Anuric by writing Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., or Bridgeburg, Ont., enclosing 10c.

St. Catharines, Ont.—"For sixteen years I have been a sufferer from kidney trouble; my back has ached almost continuously and I have had rheumatic pains in my arms, hands and lower limbs. I have doctored and tried every medicine recommended to me, but have never found the relief in anything (no matter how much I took) that I have found in one small package of Anuric. In one week the secretion cleared and my bladder was stronger than for years, so that I was not disturbed at night, where I always had to arise several times during the night. I only hope that many will read this and will try Anuric if they suffer with any sort of kidney trouble."—MRS. JACOB LOSSEBERT, 25 Albert St.

DEPTHS OF SEA FROZEN.

The query that most frequently reaches the editor of the Scientific American is in reference to the sinking of a heavy body in water. In a recent issue he replied to some of these questions as follows:

"The belief seems to be widely held that at a certain depth an iron ship or an iron ball will remain suspended, floating about and never reach the bottom. These inquirers evidently confuse weight and pressure. A body sinks in a fluid when it weighs more than the fluid which it displaces, which evidently has the same volume as the body. For this reason any heavy body will go to the bottom in water, since water is nearly incompressible."

An engineer of high repute took exception to this statement, asserting that at a depth of 33.7 miles water would be as dense as cast-iron, and therefore cast-iron would float at that depth. The Scientific American exposes the fallacy of this argument, and now publishes a letter from "an authority connected with the Geographical Laboratory, Washington D.C.," containing calculations of the specific gravity of water at depths up to thirty-six miles. These prove that if there be water at any such depths it is frozen solid in the dense form of ice, frozen by pressure of the water above it, since the freezing point of water is lowered by pressure.

GIRLS WHO DISAPPEAR.

Tragedy of the Thousands That Sink Into Oblivion Yearly.

They vanish into oblivion. Soon they are forgotten, but the heartache of the mother left behind is never stilled. It will ache on through the remaining days of her life.

That is a problem that we will not attempt to solve. We only know that they are swept away by the great whirlpool of life.

The federal statistics furnished by the bureau of vital statistics show that 50,000 persons disappear each year. They vanish into oblivion. A greater proportion of these are young girls. The men who disappear turn up sooner or later in most cases, but the girls, as a rule, are forever lost. Having cut away from their social ties, having burned their bridges behind them these disappearing girls abandon usually all thought or hope of returning and become isolated members of the social colony of which they once were members. They prefer to struggle on as best they can.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

It Is a Private Company, but Acts as the Nation's Banker.

The Bank of England is not, as most people think, a government institution. It is a private company, but reaps a good profit by acting as the nation's banker. The remuneration paid to the Bank of England for the management of the national debt was fixed in 1906 as a yearly sum of the rate of £325 per million pounds and at the rate of £100 for every million pounds above this amount.

Before any of the government money that goes into the Bank of England can be spent a certain procedure has to be followed. First of all an order signed by the king and countersigned by two lords of the treasury has to be forwarded to the comptroller and auditor general of the exchequer and audit department. Then the comptroller hands an order to the treasury authorizing the Bank of England to debit the exchequer account and credit the account of the paymaster general, who makes all payments on behalf of the various departments.

Afterward the comptroller scrutinizes all the accounts paid to see that the money has been spent in accordance with the wishes of parliament.—Westminster Gazette.

Training Naval Gunners.

When England trains her gunners for the sea she sends them to Whale island in Portsmouth harbor. Here the entire island is given over to steel sheds which are built like gun turrets on a battleship. The great guns projecting from these sheds are dummies, though they are exact counterparts of those on a battleship. The prospective officers and men are made to go through the exercise of range finding, loading, aiming and "firing" these guns as rigidly as if they were in a real battle at sea. The heavy steel projectiles are hauled from the magazine by hydraulic and electric cranes, just as in an actual ship. A real breech mechanism locks the projectile and its powder charge in the gun, while an intricate swivel mounting of steel swings the gun into the firing position.—Popular Science Monthly.

Remarkable Luck.

In Gold Hill, Nev., in 1877, one of the mining bosses—Tole by name—had trouble with some of the laborers in his mine. One night three of them attacked him in a barroom. Two of them pinned him down, while a third stood over him with a revolver. The muzzle almost touched his stomach. Once, twice, thrice, a fourth and a fifth time the weapon snapped. Tole closed his eyes. Each moment he expected to be his last. The disgusted ruffian threw his disappointing weapon on the floor with an oath and, joined by his aids left the place. Tole wiped the cold sweat from his brow, mechanically picked up the discarded weapon, went to the door and fired off every charge remarking that it was just his luck.

How He Cleared Himself.

While passing along a busy street in Dublin a lady was relieved of her hand bag, and Sandy was arrested on suspicion of having snatched it. He was placed among a group of men, and the lady was asked to single out the culprit. She passed down the line till she came to Sandy.

"Officer," she said, "I think that is the man, although I did not see his face clearly."

"The lady's wrong, sir. I was wearing a different suit. Can I go now, sir?" said Sandy.

Doing Things.

"As a soldier," said Goethals, "I have always considered 'Do' an essential element of duty. In analyzing men for detail duty on the canal I found that the man with military training had an advantage in knowing how to obey. Service is nothing more than obedience in a broad sense. If you escape duty you avoid action. Sterr duties do not require larsn commands Knowledge of our duties is the most essential part of the philosophy of life."

Goethals once remarked: "The world demands results. It is recorded that Lord Kitchener, when a subordinate during the South African war began to explain a failure to obey orders, said: 'Your reasons for not doing it are the best I ever heard. Now go and do it!' That is what the world demands today."—B. C. Forbes in Leslie's.

Modern Music.

Modern music is music. Before it there was no harmony. The first attempts at harmony were naturally crude. Guido of Arezzo devised notation by lines and spaces. Franco of Cologne first indicated the duration of notes by diverse forms. Bars were introduced later and modern music developed more decided rhythm, though at first guided by the ear and not by science. Joaquin Dupres of Flanders began the blending of musical art in the fifteenth century, which was continued in the seventeenth century by Palestrina of Rome. The opera greatly extended music in the sixteenth century, and the honor of perfecting the opera and orchestral music is divided between Italian and German composers.

Japan's Population.

Of Japan's 54,000,000 people, about 200,000 are Christian believers. This figure includes Roman and Greek Catholic converts. Protestant church members number 97,350, of whom 11,886 were baptized in 1915-1916. The gain was about 14 per cent.

The Hopeville Debatin' society was Squar' Joslyn's idea. It dawned on him one afternoon as he was hoein' in his garden, and that evenin' he came over to the drug store and made a speech and started the ball rollin'. A week later the society had its first meetin'. There was a hot time fur about an hour. Of the forty men present five wanted to be president, but after awhile and by puttin' in two votes fur himself the squar' was duly elected. Deacon Jackson was made referee, and the other offices was struggled after to an extent. There wasn't any debate at the first meeting, but Squar' Joslyn made a speech of acceptance which raised the price of butter in Hopeville 10 cents per pound. After saying that he wouldn't exchange places with the president of the United States he began with the year 750 B. C., and the way he come whirlin' along down to the year 1915 made the glass in the windows rattle. He excited the crowd as he hit Nero, brought applause as he touched Columbus, and when he got through with Washington there wasn't no holdin' Enos Williams, and Jonas Bebee and Aaron Bradshaw was in tears. After the speech was over Elder Harper figgered up and declared that the squar' had made twenty-seven different p'ints in his oration.

The subject fur debate at the next meetin' was "Does Honesty Pay?" The number on the affirmative and negative sides was almost even, and Ebenezer White was appointed to lead off and tell how honesty paid him. Each speaker was to be limited to ten minutes. Ebenezer had been thinkin' it over fur three or four days, and when he got up he began with:

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar. When Caesar was a young man of twenty-two he hadn't a dollar to his name and no show to strike a job. He had about made up his mind to commit suicide when he found a five dollar gold piece in the road. His first thought was to use the money to start in business, but it was only a temptation. His honesty wouldn't permit such a thing. He went around inquirin' who had lost $5 and at length found the owner, and the owner took a likin' to him and pushed him along until he was finally made a king."

"That's one tally mark fur the affirmative side," said the deacon as the speaker sat down, "and I decide that Ebenezer has made five p'ints. We will now hear from Jonas Bebee on the negative side."

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Jonas as he rose up.

"When Caesar was a young man of twenty-two he hadn't a dollar to his name," continued Jonas. "He had made up his mind to hang himself when he found a stray mewl in the woods. He sold the critter to the first man who would buy, and with the $12 he received he went into politics and pushed along until he finally became one of the greatest men of his time."

"That's a tally mark on the negative side," said the deacon, "and the p'ints seem to be even."

The deacon called upon Aaron Bradshaw, who was on the affirmative side.

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Aaron, with a wave of his hand. He had it that Caesar was poor and out of a job and discouraged when he happened to find a diamond ring in a mudhole. He could have got an advance of $50 on it at a pawnbroker's, but he actually went hungry for three days while huntin' up the loser. Struck by such a display of unselfish honesty, the owner presented him with $75, took him under his wing and in time made him king.

"That's another tally fur the affirmative," said the deacon, "and I guess I'll give Aaron the same number of p'ints as the rest.

"It's the turn of the negative," said the deacon as Aaron sat down, "and we'll now hear from Philetus Johnson."

"Foller me back to the days of Julius Caesar," began Philetus as he rose up, and there was a row. It was full ten minutes before order was restored, and during that time everybody got his head punched at least once and his coat torn up the back. By and by Deacon Spooner said:

"It's a shame and a disgrace to this town of ours to carry on in this way. I notice that Jim Yates, who don't belong on either side, has jest come in. Jim, do you want to say anything?"

"Not very much," replied Jim as he looked around. "I'd simply like to ask if anybody here has lost this half dollar?"

He held up the coin in his fingers. There were forty-seven men in the room, and every single one of 'em, including the deacon and the squar', replied that it was his.

"As to a debatin' society, it may be a good thing," said Jim as a grin spread over his face, "but as to the subject of discussion tonight I guess you'd better drop it and let it stay dropped. This half dollar has bin in my pocket for two weeks, and every one of you was willin' to lie to git hold of it!"

Then he moved softly downstairs and went home, and after the rest of the crowd had sat and looked at each other for two or three minutes in an uncomfortable way the president put on his hat and said:

"Instead of follerin' anybody else back to the days of Julius Caesar, I guess we'd better foller Jim Yates downstairs and call the thing busted!"

Things you try to keep dark will come to light sooner or later.

The Result of a Caprice

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

"Auntie, why were you never married? I have heard that in your youth you were a great belle."

"My dear," replied the old lady, "why I was not married is a painful story to me. It has been constantly with me ever since I was nineteen years old, but I have never talked about it. There is a lesson in it for young girls like you, and on that account I will tell it to you."

Then the old lady told me the following story:

You know that I was born and raised in the south on one of those plantations that represented typical high life there before the war destroyed the institution which was its foundation. I came of age shortly before the struggle opened. I suppose it is true that I was a belle. Would that I had not been such, for the attention I received turned my head and caused what embittered my life.

Among my suitors were Alfred Beale and Edgar Turnlee. Turnlee was my favorite—indeed, I was very much in love with him—but I wished to be striven for and alternately encouraged him and his rival, Alfred Beale. One day I was sitting in the drawing room of the plantation house with Edgar. My back as well as his was toward the door opening into the great hall, while my face was toward a large mirror resting on the mantel over the fireplace. I caught a glimpse of the reflection of Alfred Beale in the hall.

He saw both Edgar and me sitting together. He paused and looked at us, making no sound to indicate to us that he was there. Indeed, he was eavesdropping, but I thought little of that. I was wrapt in the idea of being an object of strife between two young men and was tempted to see what would happen between them should I purposely increase their antagonism.

I had been expecting a proposal from Edgar and now gave him every encouragement. He was placing an arm around my waist and his face was near mine when I gave a little shriek and drew away from him, assuming to be indignant. Beale stepped into the room and, glaring at Edgar, upbraided him. Edgar looked an appeal to me to exonerate him.

It is impossible to give reasons for the freaks that enter the heads of young persons, especially young girls, in the matter of coquetry. Instead of taking the blame of Edgar's act upon myself, I walked out of the room, leaving my admirers to settle the controversy in their own way. I had no sooner left them than it occurred to me that I had acted abominably. If I had gone directly back and confessed the situation might have been saved. I was about to do so when I remembered that such an acknowledgment would bring down upon me the contempt of both men—that is, if it were believed, which I doubted.

While I was deliberating I heard both men go out of the house. I started to call them back, but hesitated, and before I had made up my mind what to do they were out of hearing.

I wondered what would come to pass between them. It did not occur to me that they would fight a duel. Dueling by this time had largely died out in the south, and I was too young to have heard much of an obsolete custom. What chiefly concerned me was that I had so deeply wronged the man I loved. I was not only suffering from consciousness of having done him an injustice, but was panic stricken lest he should never forgive me.

The affair began in the afternoon, and from then until bedtime I was in a state of dread, not that anything serious might occur between the rivals, but that I had lost my lover. In the middle of the night my father came into my room and asked me for an explanation of what had happened, for he had heard of it. Instead of telling him the truth, I left him with the impression that Edgar had transcended his rights and Alfred had resented his act. I asked father what had come of it, and he replied that I would learn the result in the morning; then he left me.

This was the first intimation I had of anything serious between the two men. Suddenly it flashed upon me that they would fight. I trembled. I lay turning the matter over in my brain, which was like a boiling caldron. With the first light of dawn I arose, dressed myself, stole down the great staircase and out on to the veranda. Looking out from behind a vine, I saw Edgar and two other young men riding by the plantation. Going to the barn, I saddled my horse, mounted and followed them.

I cannot dwell on the rest. It is too painful. I was some time in finding where they had gone. When I reached them they had fought a duel with pistols, and Alfred Beale was lying on the ground, while a surgeon was bending over him. I hurried to him to see if he were dead and was assured that his wound would not be fatal. I turned to Edgar. He gave me a look that has haunted me ever since. I saw in it that I had lost him forever.

You have heard my story. May it be a lesson to you that love is not a game for passing the time that young persons regard it. Love is a serious matter and should be treated seriously. Better the European method of matches made by parents than the follies committed by some young men and women when left to their own caprices.

If a poor man has the sand he may win a rich girl with the rocks.

Easy to Make This Pine Cough Remedy

You know that pine is used in nearly all prescriptions and remedies for coughs. The reason is that pine contains several peculiar elements that have a remarkable effect in soothing and healing the membranes of the throat and chest. Pine is famous for this purpose.

Pine cough syrups are combinations of pine and syrup. The "syrup" part is usually plain granulated sugar syrup. Nothing better, but why buy it? You can easily make it yourself in five minutes.

To make the best pine cough remedy that money can buy, put 2½ ounces (50 cents worth) of Pinex into a 16-oz. bottle, and fill up with home-made sugar syrup. This gives you 16 ounces—more than you can buy ready-made for $2.50. It is pure, good and very pleasant—children take it eagerly.

You can feel this take hold of a cough or cold in a way that means business. The cough may be dry, hoarse and tight, or may be persistently loose from the formation of phlegm. The cause is the same—inflamed membranes—and this Pinex and syrup combination will stop it—usually in 24 hours or less. Splendid, too, for bronchial asthma, hoarseness, or any ordinary throat ailment.

Beware of substitutes. Ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Nature Teaches Inventors.

"We get our hints from nature," the inventor said. "Take, for instance, the hollow pillar, which is stronger than the solid one. The wheat straw showed us the superior strength of the hollow pillar. Solid, the wheat straw would be unable to support its head of grain. Where did man get his idea for carriage springs? From the hoofs of the horse, which, like the springs derived from them, are made from parallel plates. Scissors we got from the jaws of the tortoise, which are naturel scissors; chisels from the squirrel, who carries them in his mouth; adzes from the hippopotamus, whose tvories are adzes of the best design; the plane from from the bee's jaws; the tripham-mer from the woodpecker."

SELLING AS AN ART.

The Road to Success, and the Reason Some Salesmen Fail.

In a story about a wonderful salesman a writer says in the American Magazine:

"Asked for his views on salesmanship and to give suggestions that would be helpful to others, he said: 'Any person can sell to any man who wants to buy, but it takes a salesman to sell to the man who doesn't want to buy. It took me five months in one case to work my way into the confidence of a wealthy man who hated life insurance agents, and we had been acquainted a month before he discovered that I was selling insurance. He later had me write him up for a $10,000 policy.

"'A salesman should know his goods forward and backward, know human nature like he knows the alphabet and not lie. Self confidence, which is indispensable to success, results from exact knowledge of what you are offering to sell and knowledge of your prospect.

"'Salesmen sometimes fail because they have a set way of dealing with all kinds of people. That will never do. They should learn to adapt themselves to all sorts and conditions of men and women. Use an easy conversational tone. Be natural. Don't get excited or talk loud. Make strong, positive assertions about your goods. You must be absolutely certain that the article you are selling is the very best on earth. Then stop talking before you kill the sale by talking too much.'"

GRAVEDIGGER BEETLES.

These Queer Insects Have a Remarkable Sense of Smell.

When an animal dies in a garden or in the woods and decomposition begins carrion bugs come from far and near. A dead bird, a mouse or a harmless snake wantonly killed by some wanderer provides a banquet for hundreds of insects. Among these the "gravediggers" are found, embracing forty-three species, twelve of which are found in Europe, the rest in America.

You can identify these beetles, says the Popular Science Monthly, by the two jagged yellowish red or reddish transverse bands upon their black wing covers. Their scientific name, necrophorus, means no more than "buriers of the dead." As undertakers the insects have legs especially adapted for digging.

A gravedigger beetle has a most extraordinary sense of smell. He can detect the peculiar odor of decomposition a long distance away and flies to the dead thing as straight as an arrow. His remarkably keen nose is situated in his clubbike feelers.

As a rule several gravediggers are found near a dead body. They crawl under it and scratch the supporting earth away, so that the body soon lies in a hollow. Gradually the body is lowered until it sinks below the surface. Then it is covered with earth. The female lays her eggs around the interred form, thus insuring for the newly hatched larvae a plentiful food supply.

Emeralds and Beryls.

There is no decline in the vogue of the emerald, using the word not in the generic sense of the trade, but for a beryl of the accepted green emerald hue. Fine specimens always cause a flutter in the auction room, for the very good reason that those are extremely rare. Perfect stones are as costly as fine rubies and, of course, much more so relatively than diamonds.

The Duke of Devonshire owns what is believed to be the largest and nearest faultlessness in existence, and it came from Nuzo, in Colombia, the main source of modern examples. The ancient emeralds of great magnitude we read of were probably not beryls at all, and, indeed, "oriental emerald" is the designation of the green corundums.—London Chronicle.

Doesn't Always Work.

"Take my advice," said the man who has a great deal of litigation. "Do anything rather than go into court."

"I tried that once, and it taught me a lesson."

"How so?"

Asmodeus.

Asmodeus is an evil genius or demon. In the apocryphal book of Tobit he is represented as slaying the seven husbands of Sarah. In the Talmud he is described as the prince of demons and is said to have driven Solomon from his kingdom.

Distastefully Put.

A REALISTIC ANSWER.

The Sentry Didn't Have to Go Into Details With the Officer.

During one of Haig's attacks on the Hindenburg line a "Minnie" had come over and knocked all the strafing out of a sentry. He staggered to his feet—except for the tremendous shaking, practically unhurt—fighting for breath, which he could not get back for some minutes. While he was so standing a young officer, newly out, turned the corner of the trench. There was a heavy bombardment on. The unexperienced young officer, not knowing what had happened and seeing the sentry rifleless (his rifle had been blown many yards away), knees bent, body limp, eyes half out of his head and mouth (half full of dust) gaping open like a loosened sack head, inquired, "Well, what's the matter with you?"

The man tried to answer, but had no breath to do so, and, knocked silly as he was by the shock, gaped helplessly and idiotically at the officer, who said again, this time more sharply, "What's the matter with you?"

At that moment over came another "Minnie," falling sufficiently near the officer to serve him exactly as the previous one had served the sentry. As half blinded, wholly smothered and three-quarters stunned the officer stumbled to his feet the sentry ran forward to help him up. Then, standing the regulation two paces away, the sentry came smartly to attention and, ceremoniously saluting, said, "Beg pardon, sir; I couldn't answer before, but that's what was the matter with me."—London Chronicle.

OUR LAGGING WORLD.

Its Motion Is Slowing, and the Day Is Growing Longer.

Our earth appears to be slowing down its spin. Two British astronomers who have finished a long study of the matter report that it now takes almost exactly three seconds longer for the world to turn over once than it took 100 years ago, and a century hence still another three seconds will have been added to the day.

At this rate Shakespeare had nearly ten seconds less in his twenty-four hours than has a modern dramatist. William the Conqueror was handicapped a half minute in keeping up with his descendants. Julius Caesar was a whole minute to the bad, while even if he had lived to old age his life would still have been some twenty of our days short of what his biographers would have claimed for him.

Abraham and the early Pharaohs would have been still more pressed for time. The earliest men, say in the year 100,000 B. C., would have had no use for "How to Live on Twenty-four Hours a Day," for they had only twenty-three hours to do their living in and were really only seventy-six years old when they thought they had reached fourscore.—Edwin Teaney Brewster in St. Nicholas.

"Flying" Americans.

Wilbur and Orville Wright began their experiments with the aeroplane fourteen years before the great conflict awakened Americans to the wonderful part that aircraft was to play in warfare. The first flight of these famous brothers over the barren sand dunes at Kitty Hawk, N. C., lasted but twelve seconds. It was another American, Glenn H. Curtiss, who made the first successful flight in a flying boat. He was then working on aeroplanes for the navy and experimented with a biplane equipped with floats. Giving this up for the time being, he straightway came across. That was in 1911, and the first great stride toward giving the American navy its fleet of fighting boats that by following five years later, when congress set aside $2,250,000 for naval aircraft alone.—F. H. Evans in St. Nicholas.

Oddly Expressed.

In one of his letters William Brookfield tells how as school inspector he had to give an examination on physical science. "What was I to do? I knew nothing about hydrogen or oxygen or any other 'gen.' So I set them a paper which I called 'applied science.' One of my questions was 'What would you do to cure a cold in the head?' A young lady answered, 'I should put my feet into hot water till you were in a profuse perspiration.'"

Poor Richard.

"In December of the year 1732," says Bigelow's "Life of Franklin," "Franklin commenced the publication of what he styled 'Poor Richard's Almanac,' or Prospence. It attained an astonishing popularity and at once. Three editions were sold within the month of its appearance. The average sale for twenty-five years was 10,000 a year."

THE MILITARY AVIATOR.

He Must Be a Soldier, a Mechanic and Absolutely Fearless.

It takes nine months to make a military aviator. The profession makes the severest possible demand upon the resources of the individual. It requires a combination of physique, of courage, of nerve poise, to make the expert flier, while to do the work of an aviator in war involves technical skill that can hardly be characterized as short of scientific.

The military flier must be a soldier, a mechanic and a daredevil. Besides sailing his craft and fighting his enemies, he must be mathematician enough to make his observations, artist enough to take photographs, telegrapher enough to operate his wireless, navigator enough to pick his way by means of map and compass over unfamiliar landscapes and resourceful enough to contend with fog, with cloud and with the thousand and one contingencies which the hazards of the air involve. Furthermore, his most difficult technical duties must be performed while that element of the death constant with which he always rides is augmented by the nasty rattle of aerial machine guns around and above him and the yap of bursting anti-aircraft shells which pursue him from below. No man with the effects of dissipation vitiating his blood and unsettling his nerves can be trusted with the issues of the air.—Peter Clark Macfarlane in Collier's Weekly.

LIVING IN JAPAN.

Hard Work For the Middle Classes to Make Both Ends Meet.

Dr. Takata, Japanese minister of education, has recently published a book concerning economic conditions in Japan. The pinch comes harder upon the middle classes than upon the lower classes since the former must not only live, but must keep up a respectable appearance on salaries no greater than those that men who work at trades receive.

For example, according to Dr. Takata, a primary school teacher earns $15.50 a month, but his lowest budget for a family of four reaches $17.33. His wife must do work at home to earn the deficit. A magazine editor and writer who has a wife, two children and a maid spends $32.75 monthly on household sundries. His earnings are irregular, but always below his expenses. He has been compelled to borrow money from his wife's relatives, and her trousseau is not unknown to the pawnshops.

The learned author states that two-thirds of the Tokyo doctors earn no more than $30 a month. Obviously the professional classes of Japan are in the grip of conditions that are far from enviable.

Washington Monument.

The cornerstone of the Washington monument was laid on its fine site, which overlooks Washington, Georgetown, Arlington and Mount Vernon, by President Polk July 4, 1848. Its marble shaft rises in all the dignity of unadorned simplicity to the height of 555 feet. The base of the shaft is fifty-five feet square, and is gradually tapers until at the 500 foot point it has diminished to less than thirty-five feet. This monument is said to contain 18,000 blocks of marble, each two feet thick. They were lifted on an elevator run by steam, suspended in an inner framework of iron, which was built up at intervals, thirty or forty feet at a time, in advance of the surrounding masonry. The aluminum capstone, nine inches high, was set in position Dec. 6, 1884, thirty-six years and a half after the cornerstone was laid.

Minimum of Waste.

"No waste, now, ma; no waste. We all gotta help."

"You attend to your own business," snapped ma with some acerbity. "The only things I throw away are tea leaves and eggshells."

Meager Achievement.

"Methuselah was the oldest man."

"Yes," replied Mr. Groucher. "But so far as I've been able to find out he was one of those men who devote their time strictly to growing old and never attempt anything else.

TO SUFFER FROM HEADACHES MAKES LIFE MISERABLE

Headaches seems to be habitual with many people. Some are seldom, if ever, free from it, suffering continually with the dull throbbings, the intense pain, sometimes in one part, sometimes in another, and then over the whole head, varying in its severity by the cause which brings it on.

The varieties of headache most common are sick or bilious headache, nervous headache, headache from constipation, debility or indigestion and periodical and spasmodic headache, and undoubtedly the cause must be removed before permanent relief can be had.

Burdock Blood Bitters, that has been on the market for over 40 years, removes the cause of the headaches, and not only does this but also restores the entire system to healthy action and buoyant vigour.

Miss Emily Smith, 204 Bellwoods Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Burdock Blood Bitters. For two years I was greatly troubled with violent headaches, particularly in the morning. I tried everything to cure me until a friend recommended B.B.B. I tried it, and now I am completely cured."

DIAMOND-DISC PHONOGRAPH

Before The Price Goes Up!

YOU can save enough, by purchasing your New Edison NOW, to secure a nice little record library. If you intend to get a phonograph by next summer, do so NOW and save this real money.

THE greatly increased cost of all materials has made it necessary to increase prices, but, while practically every leading Talking Machine Company, except Edison, has taken advantage of the big Christmas demand and increased their prices NOW, Edison, with the same consideration for the public that has marked his every move, is not increasing his prices until January 1st, 1918.

HE has done this for YOU, because his costs have increased as much, if not more, than the others who have already raised prices.

BUT, in addition to actually saving money by purchasing your New Edison NOW, you bring to your home for Christmas the Priceless Gift of Music's Re-creation. In contrast to the metallic approximation of Talking Machines, the New Edison reproduces the human voice with such fidelity and accuracy that no human ear can detect a shade of difference between the living artists and the New Edison's Re-creation of their voices—or instrumental performances.

YOU will appreciate the great advancement in sound production the New Edison has accomplished just as soon as you hear it. Come to our store now, while there is still time to make the saving in price and secure your NEW EDISON for Christmas.

A Duel in Balloons.

It was in 1808 that Mlle. Tirevit graced the footlights of the Imperial Opera at Paris. She attracted many men, especially one M. de Grandpre and another, M. le Pique. They became jealous of each other and decided that a duel was the only way out of their predicament. It was to be a duel without hatred, and so they postponed the great event for one month.

Meanwhile they came to the conclusion that an ordinary duel wouldn't do at all and hit upon the idea of fighting in the air. So they ordered two balloons constructed exactly alike and on the night of June 22 settled their affairs in anticipation of the great event upon the morrow. At the appointed hour each man entered his balloon armed with a blunderbuss, and at a signal the ropes were cut, and up they went. They were to fire at the balloons, not at each other. At a height of half a mile in the air M. de Grandpre sent a ball through M. le Pique's balloon, and the latter was dashed to pieces. The other landed safely several hours later.

Knockers.

"I don't care. Her smile is artificial."

"That's not so bad."

"Furthermore, she kisses all her woman friends effusively. That's a sure sign of a deceitful nature."

Just So.

"It might help a lot."

"Eh."

Peter the Great and Lawyers.

In Russia during the reign of Peter the Great private litigants might have their suits prosecuted free of cost by lawyers paid by the state. The emperor, discovering that his subjects were being imposed upon by their legal agents, who contrived to delay trials until they had sucked their clients dry, enacted that sufficient solicitors and attorneys should be employed at handsome yearly salaries to officiate for the public in every matter of law. He ordered further that these men should insert in a register written up daily the dates of applications to them and should proceed with the suits in the order in which they were received without respect of persons. If they failed to do so, if they accepted any bribe or fee or if they were dilatory these lawyers were to be knouted and sent to Siberia.

Bad For the Burglars.

It would be a sad gang of robbers who tried to break into the railway car invented by George W. Meyers of the United States army. They would be greeted with clouds of poisonous gas fumes.

Meyers' robber proof car works with extreme simplicity. Two tanks, in which fumes of cyanide of potassium are stored under pressure, are fitted inside of the car at each end. These are connected with a perforated pipe which extends all around the door of the car just in back of the outer framework. Should the train be held up the locomotive engineer would telephone the guards within the car, who would immediately open the valves of the tanks. The fumes would stream out through the pipe perforations and into the robbers' faces. The door being gas tight, the deadly gas could not penetrate into the car.

FINDS METAL IN WOUNDS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Detection of metal in wounds by means of a new telephonic device is described in despatches to the Department of Commerce. The instrument is moved over the body of the patient and emits a humming noise when over a shrapnel ball or splinter, and is further used in guiding a probe toward the hidden metal. Whether the metal is magnetic and can be drawn by an electro-magnet with the use of an incision also can be told by the instrument.

Dyspeptics Should Avoid Drugs And Medicines

Try a Little Magnesia Instead.

Some people instinctively shut their eyes to danger, and it may be that indigest, or custom or habit causes dyspeptics to take drugs, patent foods and medicines, artificial digestants etc.

But closing the eyes does not banish the danger, and it is certain that neither drugs nor foods possess the power to destroy the harmful excessive acid in the stomach, which is the underlying cause of most forms of indigestion and dyspepsia. They may give temporary relief, but ever increasing quantities must be taken, and all the time the acid remains in the stomach as dangerous as ever.

Physicians know this and that is why their advice so often to sufferers from digestive and stomach troubles is "Just get about an ounce of pure bisurated magnesia from your druggist, and take a teaspoonful in a little water immediately after every meal. This will instantly neutralize all the harmful acid in the stomach and stop all food fermentation, thus enabling you to enjoy hearty meals without experiencing the least pain or unpleasantness afterward.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Piece of Professional Advice

It Was Given Freely and No Fee Asked

By WILLIAM HURD HILLYER

Copyright Frank A. Munsey Co.

"Hello! Is that Mr. Burton?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, this is Mrs. Merriam. Could I see you a few minutes tomorrow morning?"

Now, I had a case in the courthouse at that time, so I said:

"Won't tomorrow afternoon do just as well, Mrs. Merriam? Say 5 o'clock."

"Couldn't you make it 4? I'm going to a tea at 5."

Now, I had an engagement at 4 with another client.

"How about half past 3, Mrs. Merriam?"

"Oh, I'm so sorry! I don't see how I can manage it. I'm just obliged to be at the Woman's club from 3 till 4."

"You couldn't postpone it until day after tomorrow?"

"No; not possibly. It's very important. Er—you couldn't see me at 2 o'clock, could you, Mr. Burton?"

Now, 2 o'clock is my lunch hour. To interfere with that is again my most ironclad rule.

"Why, I don't know, Mrs. Merriam"—I began; then, on a sudden inspiration: "I'll tell you, I might see you at lunch. Suppose I meet you at the Chelsea at 2 o'clock."

"Oh, I'd be so glad if I could see you then. But won't that put you to some inconvenience, Mr. Burton?"

"Not in the least. It's a pleasure, I assure you."

I did not tell her that I was breaking another ironclad rule of mine, which is never to talk to clients at lunch. And I never do—ordinarily.

That was how it happened that I lunched today with Mrs. Merriam. The business she wished to consult me about was not very complicated—a matter of some investments—and I promised to look further into the affair and render a more detailed opinion in a few days.

I have been Mrs. Merriam's lawyer for some time, but have never had any extended conversation with her until today. Jack Merriam and I had been intimate friends ever since we were college boys, and I was his lawyer up to the time of his death. Jack went out to Colorado in 1890 on account of his lungs. Three years later he came back, radiant with regained health and successful mining stocks.

He brought with him his young bride and her maiden aunt, who was her nearest relative. I took dinner with him several times at his home in Brooklyn, but Jack and I did most of the talking.

After Jack's death—that was two years ago—Mrs. Merriam stayed in Brooklyn, where she and her aunt kept house. I saw her two or three times while the estate was being settled—I was naturally looked upon as her legal adviser—but Jack had been sensible to sell out his mining interests at a good profit and invest the money in gilt edged securities, so there was not a great deal to do in the way of legal contriving.

I had never seen much of Mrs. Merriam. I had but one definite impression concerning her. It is a mental habit of mine to classify every woman I see, according to her looks, in one of three grades—A, B and C. I had classified Mrs. Merriam as A—that was all.

Today after we had finished with business matters we talked about things in general for a while.

She is really quite sensible. I must say I enjoyed myself.

She is a rather slender person of medium height. Her hair—I think you would call it dark brown, but I am under the impression that it has a reddish tinge. I don't remember what color her eyes are.

She is not at all reserved, yet somehow remarkably dignified. I insisted on paying the bill—over her solemn protest. I trust I did the correct thing.

* * * * * * *

I'm in a quandary. Mrs. Merriam came to my office yesterday to learn the result of my investigations and requested me to present a bill for my services.

Now, I had never dreamed of charging her anything. It had been no trouble at all, and I told her so. She said, "Very well; I shall have to pay you what I think the advice is worth if you decline to fix a price," and this froze me to the bone.

"Do you think $50"—she began, but I roused myself and cut her short with: "Oh, never mind, Mrs. Merriam. I'll send you a bill at the end of the month if you desire it. It's not customary to pay before then. We can settle on a price at that time, I've no doubt."

The fact is I wanted a chance to think. Fifty dollars! She evidently believes that lawyers are highwaymen.

The whole affair has not taken up more than an hour of my time. I don't count the half hour spent at the Chelsea. That was recreation and amusement.

I think I will send in a bill for 100 cents and make a joke of it. But she might not like that. Yes, she can take a joke. I know she can. But here, wouldn't it be a bit rude—rather too presuming?

Yet why not? Jack Merriam was one of my best friends. I have been to their home, and all that.

I am glad I don't have to decide the question of the bill at this time. I'll see what I shall do at the end of the month.

* * * * * * *

I have been working very hard lately. The Tanyer case has gone through the mill again, and our side gained it, but the other side made a federal question of the thing and sued out a writ of error to the supreme court of the United States.

The case is now locked up before that august tribunal. The evidence fills 200 pages.

In addition to this and five or six other cases up for trial, I have had a good deal of business to transact for Mrs. Merriam.

Right here I must say that my conscience is not unclouded. To be sure, I have stirred up no lawsuits, nor am I guilty of the crimes of maintenance and champerty. But I am forced to confess that I have rendered her business more complicated than it might have been.

To put it plainly, I have made professional conferences necessary where, by a little management, they might have been avoided. I have advised her to ask advice. I entwined her business with red tape.

Yet I have not mismanaged her affairs. I have made money for her, and she knows it.

At the end of the first month I sent in my bill. "To professional services rendered, 100 cents."

And, do you know, she refused to pay it. She sent it back with a note claiming that the charge was exorbitant and that she thought 50 cents was a fair compensation for my services.

Yes, she has a sense of humor, all right!

Well, I tore up the bill and wrote another, putting 50 in the place of 100, and the return mail brought me her check on the Manhattan Trust company for 50 cents, since which I have rendered her no more bills.

* * * * * * *

Yesterday afternoon, while I was dictating a letter to my stenographer, the office boy looked in from the main room and remarked:

"Mrs. Merriam's outside."

A few minutes later I had sent the stenographer to his machine, and she was following me into my private office.

"I'm so sorry to have kept you waiting," I said. "But that letter just had to be finished. Have this chair, Mrs. Merriam. Now, what can I do for you?"

She seemed somewhat embarrassed.

"Mr. Burton"—she began.

Then she stopped. I waited.

"You've been my lawyer for some time, and I've learned to respect your judgment. There is something about which I would like your professional advice."

Her manner had become quite businesslike.

"Certainly, Mrs. Merriam," I said. "I'll take pleasure in giving you what ever aid I can."

Then she told in a calm and straightforward way how a certain wealthy widower had offered himself in marriage and how she had the matter under consideration.

"Mrs. Merriam," I said, "it is very difficult to give advice in a case like this."

Here I paused. I was thinking hard and fast.

"Yes, I know it is"—she was beginning, but I interrupted her.

"You have asked my advice," I said, measuring my words, "and I shall give you my best judgment. The question is a difficult one. You say this man is a widower of long standing. That is, of course, a disadvantage. But without going into details," I went on, my excitement getting the better of me, "here is my advice: Do not marry the widower. Marry me instead."

She stared at me in amazement. Then the color rushed to her cheeks, and her eyes fell.

I saw my opportunity. I changed my role from counselor to advocate.

"Rose!" I cried.

I said a great deal more, but it would be out of place here, because it was entirely unprofessional. But when, after awhile, she asked me what she must say to the wealthy widower I advised her to tell him, as gently as possible, that his suit had been not pressed.

"MOM!" I CRIED.

Germany's Great Composers.

It is a significant evidence of the existence of two Germanys, says a recent writer, that not one of the great German composers was a Prussian. Bach was a Thuringian, Handel a Saxon, Gluck a Bavarian, Mozart a Bavarian, Haydn an Austrian citizen, probably a Croat; Beethoven was born in Bonn of Flemish descent on his father's side; Weber, although born in Holstein, was an Austrian; Schubert was an Austrian; Schumann a Saxon; Mendelssohn was a Jew, born in Hamburg; Wagner was a Saxon; Brahms was born in Hamburg. The same general statement is true of the chief German poets. Mme. Schumann-Heink was born in Bohemia, although of German descent. Richard Strauss is a Bavarian.

Long Winded Discussion.

"Pa, what is meant by filibustering?"

"Talking against time, my son."

"Do you ever filibuster, pa?"

"No, my boy. With the exception of that imposed by physical exhaustion, there is no limit to the debates in this particular house."

Mother Of Four Gives Advice on How to Bring Up Children

"To be successful in the personal relationship of your children you must know them. You must be with them every moment that is possible." In this way Mrs. Arthur Iselin sums up a vital question in an article, "Children and the Future," in the December issue of the Chronicle. Mrs. Iselin, who is the mother of four children, speaks with practical authority. She says in part:

"In the care and upbringing of children and in constant association with them, I believe that the first essential is a vivid and accurate memory of the way we felt ourselves and the working of our minds when we were at their age. Many of those who are entrusted with the guidance of their little feet and the training of their minds seem to have entirely forgotten that time, and therefore the necessary understanding and sympathy are lacking, and all the conscientious devotion in the world cannot replace them.

"Children differ so enormously in character and mentality that it is impossible to lay down any set rule for their management. Indeed, my whole of upbringing lies in an absence of 'system,' as that which might work with one child in ten would be a hideous failure with the other nine.

An Education for Parents.

"I had always supposed and I believe to-day that the experience of having children, of caring for them through their babyhood, and association with them as they grow older would give a woman of ordinary intelligence a human equipment of greater value than could be gained by any artificial training.

"In a household of several little boys and girls it is well to encourage charades, tableaux vivants, and plays. A grown-up can throw himself into these more ambitious games with enjoyment, and with juvenile performers an appreciative audience is assured. Let them borrow the baby to portray 'the Dove of Peace' in a war play, and let them employ the maids smathed in green shawls and rolling on the floor to represent the turbulent ocean as Columbus discovers America. Through these activities children lose their self-consciousness, increase their sense of humour, and store into their little brains events of history and of life which will serve them well in later years. Incidentally, the home becomes more attractive as the children find happiness and occupation and interest in the exciting preparations for these performances.

Must Know Children Well.

"What I want most of all to emphasise is this: To be successful in the personal upbringing of your children you must know them. You must be with them not for an hour at tea time every day, but at every moment that is possible. Talk to them frankly, joke with them, and let them joke with you, play with them foolish as well as sensible games, read with them, tell them stories, and make them tell you stories.

"As they grow older and if they go to school be with them in their hours of recreation and during their vacations. Answer their questions to the best of your ability and if they are foolish questions make them answer them themselves. Teach them to do the things you are able to do yourself. There is probably no prouder or more humiliating moment than when you find they can outdo you at your own game.

"From the time they are tiny teach them to see everything that is beautiful—so much of what is beautiful passes over the head of a little child who is untrained to notice. Children's minds are usually very receptive, their appreciation develops rapidly, and their impressions are clean cut and exquisite.

Teach Them of Beauty.

"Teach them to hear not only music, but poetry, prose, anything that is beautiful to listen to. Even if they cannot understand all the meaning they will learn to love the sounds and it will give them a lasting discrimination between what is good and what is bad in literature.

"Of course, there are problems to be faced with all children, all different and all difficult, and there will be bitter setbacks and moments when you feel you have failed, but as in every other work which is worth doing, the compensations make up for the discouragements, and if you give to your children the best that is yours to give it will come back to you a hundredfold.

"The careful moulding of minds and characters and the strengthening of spirits of the men and women of the future generation will do most to solve every problem of mankind and contribute to the millenium for which all of us are actually working."

This Is No Fake, Pastor-Swindler Says, Then He Dies

Newburg, N. Y., Samuel Oakley Crawford, better known in the Hudson Valley as the Rev. Arthur Worthington, has just been held in the County Court here for extradition to Baltimore, on a charge of swindling Mrs. Jennie Showalter out of $300 under promise of marriage, when he said he was ill, and wanted a physician.

"I suppose they will think that I am faking now," said Crawford, who was seventy-two years old.

He was hurried from the court room into a side room and there he died before a physician arrived. Heart disease was the cause.

Thus ended one of the oldest careers known to the American police. Beginning with a good education as a young man he served his first term in jail in Albany and obtained much unpleasant notoriety through becoming involved with a married woman in New York City, nearly fifty years ago.

He was about to be elected United States Senator from South Dakota at the time that State was admitted to the union when the newspapers exposed his career in Oregon and Colorado, where he had been held on charges of real estate swindling.

Soon after that Crawford appeared in New York as the pastor of a "Temple of Truth," and there increased several wealthy women. One of them gave him $40,000 and with her he made a tour of the world, stopping at Australia for several years, and later he admitted that he had practised law there and had served several jail terms.

In some manner he obtained a certificate as a Presbyterian clergyman, and for several years was pastor of the church of New Hamburgh, N.Y., under the name of Worthington.

While there, it is said, he made numerous excursions, each time annexing a new wife and obtaining an additional sum of money. Several such women had found him when he fled from New Hamburgh. He was found in a soldiers' home in Virginia and returned here on a charge of swindling the Rev. Frederick H. Stanley out of $500. Upon being acquitted on that charge he was held on Mrs. Showalter's accusation. The police said that they had at least a dozen women who wanted to prosecute him.

U. S. ATTITUDE TO RUSSIA.

Government Has Not Recognized the Bolsheviki—Continues Policy of Awaiting Developments.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 17.—Recognition of the Bolsheviki Government by the United States still is remote, it was indicated to-day at the State Department. Reports in Europe suggesting a developing sentiment in favour of dealing with the new regime as a defacto government have found no response here, and it was made plain that the U.S. would continue its policy of awaiting developments.

Reports from Ambassador Francis are now coming through with more regularity, but consuls in many parts of the country appear unable to communicate with Petrograd.

It was suggested here that one of the direct effects of the armistice between the German and Russian armies might be the financing of the Bolsheviki by Germany with paper money. When the war began, Russian money was being printed in Germany and the plates are still in Berlin.

6 GROUPS OF AEROPLANES TRIED TO REACH LONDON

Only 5 Machines Succeeded in Penetrating the Air Defences---10 People Killed and 70 Injured---1 Raider is Brought Down By Fire From Anti-Aircraft Guns and Another is Thought to Have Been Destroyed---German Patrols Active in Flanders.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 19.—One of the German airplanes which took part in last night's raid over England was brought down and another is believed to have been destroyed, the War Office announces. From 14 to 20 raiders divided into six groups endeavoured to reach London, but only five succeeded in dropping bombs on the city. All British planes returned safely.

There is reason to believe that another raider dropped into the English Channel, says the report. A British pilot fired two drums of ammunition into the raider is at was dropping bombs on London from a height of 13,000 feet. After the main attacks of the raiders ceased a single airplane flew over London at about 9 o'clock.

The raider known definitely to have been destroyed was hit by fire from anti-aircraft guns and finally dropped into the sea off Kent. Two of the crew of three were captured alive by an armed trawler.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 19.—German patrols were active last night in Flanders near Passchendaele, otherwise there were no operations of consequence, the War Office reports.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, December 19. — Germany has withdrawn all her best soldiers from the Russian front, and replaced them by her youngest and oldest and poorest troops.

From numerous documents taken in raids and from prisoners themselves, the French Headquarters learned to-day that all German troops between 20 and 35 were being moved from the eastern to the western theatre of war. Apparently Germany began the shift at the instant of the negotiations with Russia for an armistice. Apparently the change has now been accomplished, so that the provisions in the armistice is now made effective for no troop transfers do not give Germany any concern.

(By Joseph Shapien.)

STOCKHOLM, December 19.—Socialists of the Central Powers oppose a separate peace with Russia. They fear such a step may so strengthen the German imperialists that Germany's Socialist will be wiped out forever, word to this effect was brought here to-day by International Socialist Bureau officials.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 19.—Ten persons were killed and seventy hurt in last night's air raid. Outside of London five persons were hurt. Full reports have not yet been received.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, December 19.—Two attempts by the Germans to approach the French positions in Argonne near Four De Paris last night, were defeated with losses, the War Office announced to-day.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 19.—The successful bombing by British naval aircraft of the Engel airdrome behind the German lines in Flanders, is announced in an Admiralty statement.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 19.—Field Marshal Haig, Commander-in-Chief of the British forces in France, the Times says it understands, is making important changes in his headquarter's staff, which up to this time has virtually been unaltered since he took over the supreme command.

FRENCH CRUISER SUNK.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, December 19.—The old French cruiser Chaleau Ronault, employed as a transport, was torpedoed and sunk in the Mediterranean on December 14, and the submarine which attacked her later was destroyed, was the official announcement by the French Minister of Marine. Ten of the crew were lost.

"The Man Who Took A Chance"

A Great Picture at the Empire —Don't Miss It

Very inspiring as an incentive to manly heroism will be "The Man Who Took a Chance," the Bluebird photoplay now at the Empire Theatre, with Franklyn Farnum playing the leading role. Mr. Farnum impersonates a man who ventured into unknown peril, without hesitation, to rescue the girl he loved from a band of kidnappers who held her for ransom. This episode, however, is not the only interesting and exciting feature of the photoplay. The events that led up to the acquaintance between Farnum, as the hero, and Agnes Vernon, who impersonates the heroine in the story, provide a fascinating series of screen incidents that make "The Man Who Took a Chance" one of the very best of Bluebirds.

BIGAMY CASE HEARD IN THE COUNTY COURT

THE EVIDENCE

This morning a case of bigamy occupied the attention of the County Court. Frederick Oakes, the accused, was charged wih having unlawfully entered into a marriage contract with Ida McClennan, while his first wife was still living.

The Grand Jury brought in a true bill against Oakes, who was represented in Court by Mr. G. N. Gordon.

Ella May Oakes (nee Ella May Shaw), wife number one, was the first witness called.

Examined by Crown Attorney Hatton, witness said that her home was in Mount Pleasant, and that she first met the accused about ten years ago. She said she was married to Oakes in Lindsay, but could not recall the name of the officiating minister or the exact place where the marriage took place. She saw the marriage certificate, but never had possession of it. Witness lived with Oakes in Bethany for about five years. Two children were born; one while witness was living with Oakes and one several months after they separated. Witness said she left Oakes and went to live with her father. While in Bethany, the prisoner was employed as a labourer, and also took care of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches. It was a year ago last summer that witness first heard that Oakes was married to another woman. Witness made no complaint and did not take any action in connection with the matter.

Cross-examined by Mr. G. N. Gordon, witness said that she was now living in Fraserville.

"Does he read or write?" inquired Mr. Gordon, referring to the accused

Wife Number Two.

Wife number two, in the person of Ida McClennan, was next called to the stand. Witness kept twisting up the handle of a small hand bag which she carried, and otherwise displayed considerable nervousness. The witness said she was now living with her mother and incidentally taking care of her sister-in-law's child. She first met Oakes about "two summers" ago, and subsequently the two went to Toronto and were married. The marriage certificate, which was produced in Court, named the Rev. F. J. Plummer, of St. Augustine's Church, Toronto, as the officiating minister. The honeymoon was spent at the Toronto Exhibition. The date of the marriage was 4th September, 1916. Later on the matrimonial career of wife number two received a setback when Oakes' mother informed her that Oakes had another wife living. Witness then went to see Chief of Police Thompson, and subsequently left Oakes and went to live with her sister-in-law. Oakes' mother is now in the Home.

Some difficulty was experienced in connection with the evidence of Chief Thompson, who was next called. Mr. Gordon objected to certain parts of

Chance to Help the Fifteen Youngsters Who Are in the Children's Aid Society Shelter — Donations From the Public Asked For

A CHRISTMAS TREE

The people of Peterborough are asked not to forget the children at the Children's Aid Society Shelter. The usual Christmas treat for these little folks will be held on Christmas 'Eve and the public is asked to do its share in making the event a success. There are fifteen children in the Shelter and the joyousness of their Christmas entertainment depends upon the people of the city. Donations of candies, toys, books, sleighs, hockey sticks, dolls, etc., will be appreciated, and may be left at the Review or Examiner Offices or at the Shelter.

Curling Schedule Is Under Preparation

Mr. J. H. Ferguson is engaged in drawing up the inter-rink scheduled games which will be commenced early in the year. In the meantime there are games at the Charlotte street rink every night. Some of the new members are booming the stones against the ends of the rink, when they are not falling outside the hog line.

Last night five games were in progress and a few of the old reliables have already drawn the range of the "tee" as if yesterday were the end of February. And they were playing in top form. Unless the weather has slipped back beyond the freezing point to the milder registrations, the ice should remain in good condition.

Stores Will Be Open Evenings Before Christmas

The dry goods stores of the city will be open on Friday, Saturday, and Monday nights in order to give Christmas shoppers an opportunity of completing their Christmas shopping.

The law allows the stores to remain open four nights prior to Christmas, commencing Thursday night, but the dry goods stores are not going to take advantage of this provision.

Evening dresses have long, pointed trains.

A Group of Swagger Fashion Girls with the famous comedy success "VERY GOOD EDDIE," coming to "The Grand" for matinee and evening next Saturday, December 22.

Theatregoers of this city have heard a great deal about that wonderful musical comedy success which ran in New York for over a year, "Very Good Eddie," but they scarcely expected to see it presented here with its Broadway cast complete, and with its famous New York Princess Theatre swagger fashion chorus. But such will be the case, and "Very Good Eddie" will be seen here in all its glory on Saturday next.

Playgoers will hardly consider "Very Good Eddie" a total stranger, for its many musical gems have been sung and played here for months, and dance orchestras have found a veritable gold mine of tuneful melodies in its popular score. Likewise, it has just been presented in Toronto and Montreal, and the newspapers of these cities are a unit in describing the show as the smartest, brightest and "classiest" musical comedy of many years. Only four Canadian cities, outside of Toronto and Montreal, are to see this show with its Broadway cast, and those who are fortunate enough to witness it will enjoy what has been described as the final word in high-class musical entertainment.

WILL CANVASS THE CITY FOR FUNDS FOR NEW CLUB ROOMS

Ladies' Auxiliary of Great War Veterans' Association Decides Upon This Step at Enthusiastic Meeting Held Last Night.

BUSINESS MEN'S COMMITTEE

A well-attended meeting of the officers of the Great War Veterans, Ladies' Auxiliary, and representatives of the different churches and societies in the city was held last evening in the G.W.V.A. Club Rooms in the Barrie Building to consider ways and means of procuring the necessary funds for furnishing the new club rooms.

Mr. E. A. Peck kindly addressed the meeting, and it was finally decided to make a canvass of the city. A list of the captains appointed to take charge of the different districts will be announced in a day or two.

A business men's committee, consisting of Messrs. E. A. Peck, Reid Munro, J. J. Turner, Mayor Duffus, George A. Gillespie, M.P.P., G. N. Gordon, Ald. Duncan, C. H. Pennefather, and Frank Whitehouse, will look after the canvass in the business section, comprising the district between Water and Aylmer Streets and between Brock and King Streets. The same committee will also call upon the manufacturers of the city.

Mrs. Bartlett submitted the report of the Provisional Ladies' Committee in regard to the furnishings of the club rooms, particularly as to the interview with various local merchants.

It was moved by Mrs. Devey, seconded by Mrs. Bugg, that any woman who is interested in the welfare of the G.W.V.A. may become a member of the Ladies' Auxiliary, but that the officers of the latter should be confined to the mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters of men who have gone overseas.

The objective of the canvass by the Ladies' Auxiliary is $2,000, and it is hoped that there will be a ready response to the appeal. The cause is a worthy one, and the sum asked for is comparatively small, and should be quickly realized.

LAURIER MAY BE OFFERED A CABINET SEAT

A Rumour in Montreal That Sir Robert Borden May Offer the Liberal Leader a Place on the Union Government Council Board

LIBERALS HOPE SO

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Dec. 19. — Starting from nowhere, a rumour has spread over the city, increasing in strength every minute, that Sir Robert Borden would offer Sir Wilfrid Laurier a seat in the Union Cabinet. It reached Liberal headquarters here and was discussed freely with the pious hope that it would prove true. As matters stand now Quebec is without a single French-Canadian representative on the Union side of the House, and Quebec has now been convinced that she alone is opposed to the Military Service Act. This conviction is based on solid ground and no one expects the slightest opposition to develop from now on. That being the case, Liberals here say there is no need for opposition of any sort, and the taking into the Cabinet of Sir Wilfrid would end whatever other wish might develop.

Were Sir Robert to make the offer and were Sir Wilfrid to accept, it would again put Quebec back into Confederation, or rather into line with the rest of Canada. If he stays out opposition is bound to develop and the line of cleavage between Quebec and the rest of Canada would be accentuated. That is the way Liberals here look at things. They consider that if Sir Robert were to make the offer it would prove him to be a bigger man than they ever thought he was, and they feel sure that Sir Wilfrid would accept. For him to refuse would be to go back on his promise to see the Military Service Act carried out, once the people had spoken.

Severin Letourneau, M.L.A., Liberal organizer for the district of Montreal, speaking of the election results, said: "The Liberal party has made a gallant fight and has lost. We thought we were in the fight, and we still think so. But the majority of the electorate have pronounced themselves against our policy, and we have but one thing to do, and that is to submit. The Province of Quebec, I am quite sure, will now submit respectfully to the policy it fought, but which has been sanctioned by the majority."

THE GOVERNMENT MAJORITY STANDS AT 43 TO-DAY

Hon. Frank Oliver is Apparently Beaten in Edmonton Where Major-General Griesbach Has a Majority of 900 With Few Polls to Hear From

THE LATEST SUMMARY

Canadian Press Despatch:

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 19.— As reports from the far-away polls of West Edmonton come in, it is evident that Hon. Frank Oliver, Sir Wilfrid's chief western lieutenant, has had the fight of his life in his former constituency, which was regarded as practically safe for him. This morning the Unionist candidate, Brigadier General W. A. Griesbach, is leading by 900 majority, with a few small polls to hear from. Battle River, Sask., is also still incomplete, though Blair, the Unionist, is leading. Victoria, Alberta, is today conceded to the Opposition candidate, W. H. White. The Alberta standing to-day is:

Government 3, Opposition 1, incomplete 2. This makes the summary for the Dominion to date as follows:

Government 136.
Opposition 93.
Incomplete 2.
Deferred 4.
Government majority, 43.

Of these included in the Opposition, Messrs. McCoig, Truax and Duncan Ross, all of Ontario, have heretofore supported the Military Service Act.

MAJORITY 175,085.

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Ont., Dec. 19.—The popular majority in favour of Union Government in Ontario was 15,085. These figures are obtained by the following computation:

Six ridings no Laurier candidate, 31,477.
McCoig and Truax majorities, 977.
Total, 185,954.

EASTERN TOWNSHIPS.

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 19.— The eastern townships constituencies went solid for Laurier candidates, and with such large majorities they cannot be affected by the soldiers' vote, with perhaps the possible exception of Brome County. In Brome the Unionist party have met with perhaps their keenest disappointment in the townships. They had hoped that an overseas officer, associated with the township's most noted regiment, would carry his home county. Mr. McMaster, the Opposition candidate, however, personally canvassed every elector, taking advantage of an opponent on active service. The majority of 857 in Brome, however, is not one which can be considered secure for Mr. McMaster. The overseas vote of soldiers may possibly change the result.

Election Returns

With almost all outlying points now heard from, there is a gradual settling down of the excitement of the past month, and people are again taking up the every day problems that are especially insistent so close up to Christmas. A lot of people who have been putting off buying till the last few days, had better decide right now to add that new piece of furniture to the home, that has been needed so long. There will never be a better opportunity than right now at Harry Zack's big annual Christmas Sale of Furniture and House Furnishings. His prices are all reduced to an astonishing degree, and intending buyers can save about a third of the regular price if they buy before Christmas Day.

His terms, too, are most favourable for if you haven't the cash to pay for your purchase, you can have it on easy terms. His store is easily found at 420 George Street (opposite Examiner Office).

A PRICELESS GIFT.

As a Christmas Gift to those who require them, a pair of Glasses is about as fitting a remembrance as can be imagined. You can arrange all the details of such a gift with Dr. Lacey. Lenses changed after the holidays without extra charge. See him and see better. Open Wednesday evening.—416 George Street.

Peterboro' Red Cross Society

An Earnest Appeal to Every Peterborough Woman Who is Interested in Our Sick and Wounded Soldiers

The following telegram has been received by the secretary from headquarters:

"Pneumonia jackets urgently needed in England. Will Peterborough make and ship at once two hundred? —Plumptre."

This is no request that we can take our time in complying with. It is an extremely urgent appeal, which must be answered in the affirmative without a moment's unnecessary delay.

This is the Christmas season, and though most of us find it very hard and difficult to exhibit the happy and cheerful spirit supposed to pertain to this time of year, still we are trying, in spite of the terrible strain and intense anxiety of the present situation on the Western front, for the sake of the little ones to have a happy Christmas for them "ere the sorrow comes with years." In spite of the fact that this is a busy time with the women generally, we put forward this appeal with every confidence that tomorrow afternoon, at two o'clock, will find the Red Cross Work Room at the Library full to overflowing with earnest women making pneumonia jackets for the men who are "giving their greatest" for our sakes and for those who are to come after us.

Our own Christmas will be happier and brighter if we answer this appeal enthusiastically, so that in our hearts we may honestly feel we have "done what we could." Reading between the lines of this telegram, we see visions of thousands of our men sick and dying as the result of the tremendous attempt the Germans are going to make to break our lines on the Western front. Will the women of Peterborough, who have never failed in any good work they have tried to do, come to-morrow in answer to this, the most urgent appeal we have made for a long time, so that the two hundred pneumonia jackets we are asked for may very speedily be on their way to where they are sorely needed? The heroes of this war are giving more than a few hours each week to their tragic task. What will the women of Peterborough give?

THE HUMAN BOND.

There is something supremely pathetic and significant in the common funeral and burial in one common grave of more than two hundred victims of the Halifax disaster, whose remains were unidentified. They were known to nobody, yet the bond of common humanity dictated the last tokens of respect and the last rites of common religion. Hundreds of Halifax citizens, many of them of the recently bereaved, with streaming eyes, assisted in the religious services. Under the wintery sky there were sung the ever grand hymns, "O God Our Help in Ages Past," and "Abide With Me," while a military band played the "Dead March in Saul." There was also sung the Roman Catholic mass for the dead. The more than two hundred bodies were escorted in solemn procession to the cemetery, where in a common grave two score yards in length, the unknown dead were covered with mother earth. This pathetic ceremony, performed while the rest of Canada was seething in the ferment of a fierce political contest, showed how human we are; that even the unknown dead are dear to us, because of the common tie of humanity; we lay their nameless bones tenderly to rest, with the religious rites that brighten the graveside sadness of mortal farewell, with the Christian hope of triumphant resurrection and reunion beyond the grave.

FULL SPEED AHEAD.

The partizans of the Union Government rightfully claim that the election result is a mandate for "full speed ahead" in the matter of forwarding reinforcements. The country has ordered the Government to do this, and it is to be hoped that the Government, with full authority, will show more "speed ahead" than it has hitherto done. It is now in a position to enforce the Military Service Act. It is not restrained by any considerations of modifying the conscription measure in the interests of vote getting. It has all and more than the votes it needs to warrant effective action. Conscription has been hanging in the air since last May, when Sir Robert Borden declared for conscription as the one thing needed to secure speedy and adequate reinforcements for Canadian soldiers at the fighting front. Up to the present, though for some months the Military Service Act has been the law of the land, not a single man is under the Colours by the application of its provisions. If the Union Government is to show its bona fides in the matter, it must necessarily take measures for acting on the warrant with which the people have so emphatically endowed it. There is not much excuse for delay. The Government has the legal authority to proceed with the raising of another 100,000 men; it has the mandatory endorsation of the people, and it has the money, through the Victory Loan, to provide the needed equipment.

Quebec did credit to herself by defeating the Nationalist candidates who presented themselves for election.

THE CALL OF THE TIME.

For many weeks we have been living in an atmosphere of discord and recrimination — bandying unworthy names and imputing unworthy motives—all out of tune with the spirit of harmony that should mark the season of peace and good will, but especially out of tune with the spirit of harmonious citizenship that should mark every hour of every season of the Canadian year.

It is full time that we put aside all feelings of enmity and uncharitableness and unite in the discharge of the duties of citizenship and neighbourhood.

We are confronted with the consideration of municipal interests, but far above these, rise the claims to consideration of the relations of citizenship. This community, and every other throughout the country, has its little rifts of harmony. But Canada has the elements of more serious division, no mater how caused, or by what agency; and it becomes the duty of everybody—the government, the press, the people—to display the olive branch and unite in an honest attempt to heal the incipient schism, and close the rifts.

This will need the adoption of tolerant attitude and frictionless measures of administration; a tolerant mode of expression and a charitable tone of speech and comment.

Never was there a time when to promote harmony—to heal the harm that has been done by intemperate wards and uncharitable exhibition of spirit and opinion—there is so greatly needed so much noble restraint, so complete subordination of irritating attitude.

We must, as a people, get together, and, as far as may be done, work harmoniously together.

To this end the presence of the Christmas season, with its mesage and spirit of peace and good-will, should help us to put ourselves in the frame of mind to help us make our discharge of the duties of citizenship accord with the spirit of the season and the demands of the national situation.

We can train ourselves for the better practice of the higher citizenship by practising, during the Christmas season the actions whose spirit should influence our relations of citizenship the year round.

In the bitter air of winter, even in the midst of large material prosperity, there are many unfortunates who need the help and ministrations of those more happily situated. There are homes where the empty fuel bin, the scanty larder, the insufficient home furnishings mean long drawn out discomfort, if not positive suffering. These conditions make their call upon our hearts and our hands and—our purses.

Shivering, scantily fed and thinly-clothed children appeal, by force of contrast, to us with our happy, well-fed, well tended and well clothed and comfortably warmed children.

But above all there are, doubtless, cases where the victims of ungrateful or forgetful governments are in need of a job, a bed, or a bite. The returned soldier, who has done his work and come home invalided or broken, deserves all our sympathy, kindness, and gratitude; but especially so if one or more of them is recorded among the "missing"—has missed the pension or allowance, or the help that is due the returned soldier. If there are, and it is feared there may be, any such cases, they should be diligently sought out and succoured.

We are loudly called upon to both forget and remember—forget our dividing differences and petty squabbles over politics, and remember our duties as fellow citizens; and, dark though the times, cruel as are the conditions, we may make this Christmas time the fact and starting point of conditions within our control, of neutralizing what is hard and unhappy in our lot, and by united cooperation, make our community and country harmonious and comparatively happy.

If the new government applies to the performance of its duties the same energy and interest it showed, and took, in winning the election, we shall have a vigorous administration.

Buried In Soldier's Grave

Last Resting Place of Pte. P. J. Fitzgerald Marked By a Rifle

A Company 46th Can. Inf., France.
To T. J. Fitzgerald, 20th Can.

Dear Sir,—In answer to your inquiry regarding particulars of your brother's death.

Your brother, I am sorry to inform daele, on the night of Oct. 26, 1917. daele ,on the night of Oct. 26th, 1917.

I am glad to inform you that he died a very painless death, being killed instantly along with his chum, Pte. Taylor, by a 5.9 shell.

His personal effects were handed into the Battalion Orderly Room next day, and will be forwarded to his next-of-kin in due course.

Circumstances did not allow for him to be buried in a regular military cemetery, but we buried him as decently as possible in a "soldier's grave" only a few yards from where he fell. He was buried along with his chum, Pte. Taylor, who was killed by the same shell, and his grave is marked by his rifle at the head of the grave, with a small board bearing both their numbers, rank and name and Battalion, also their identity discs. The map location of his grave is military map Passchendaele, D. 15, 20, 29. If you ever wish to look it up you will easily find it from the map location.

If it is any satisfaction to you or to his next-of-kin, I can inform you that his officers, myself and his M. C. O's. cannot speak too highly of him. He was always a good soldier, and did his duty at all times to the entire satisfaction of every one.

He was always of a cheerful disposition, and is very much missed in the Company by his comrades who knew him best, and we are all very sorry and sympathise with you and your people in your great loss.

In conclusion, I may state I shall be willing at any time to answer any enquiries regarding your brother, either from yourself or any of his relatives.

My company officer wishes me to add his regrets at the loss of your brother, and at the same time wishes to place on record his appreciation of his good services while with this company and for his country. I remain.

Yours in sympathy,
JAS. EPWORTH,
C. S. M., "A" Company.

WERE BRAVE TO THE LAST

Pte. Percy Windsor Refers to the Death of Dick Wedlock and Austin Tobin

Writing from Paris, France to a member of the Examiner staff, Pte. Percy Windsor, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, and well remembered by hockey fans as one of the stars of the 93rd hockey team, refers to the death at the front of two well known Peterborough boys. He says in part:

"Bill Russell is with me. There are not many of us left and I tell you I do not feel the same at all since we lost Dick Wedlock. Poor fellow, he died before help could get to him, and I want you if any time you happen to see any of his folk, to tell them for me that I was with them to the last, also Lieut. Johnston, who cried as we were burying him. It was pitiful and everybody feels his loss keenly in the battalion, as Dick was well thought of and a brave soldier. Austin Tobin was hit at the same time and he was on his way to the dressing station. He could walk but he did not go very far until he was struck again with a piece of shrapnel on the head and was too weak to continue. We helped to carry him to the dressing station, but poor fellow, he died two days later. I guess I have said enough. I can't write very much when I think that I lost two of my best pals, but knowing that they were brave to the last makes it easier. I wish you to express to Mr. and Mrs. Wedlock my deepest sympathy in the loss they have sustained in the death of their brave soldier son.

Best regards.
P. D. WINDSOR.

COMMISSION FOR A PETERBORO' BOY

Son of City Treasurer Adams Selected For Commission in Imperial Army

Wilfrid Adams, of this city, has been selected, together with a number of others, as a candidate for a commission in the Imperial Army. For some time past Lieut. Adams has been a member of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps. He is a son of City Treasurer Adams and the second member of the family to join the colours. Merton Adams, a brother, died while at Barrieficld Military Camp.

LITTLE WASPS OF THE SEA HAVE HELD BACK THE HUNS

With the French Army in Italy, Dec. 10.—Italy's defence of Venice has proved the fighting qualities of the motor boat.

Propelled by powerful engines and capable of almost incredible speed, armed with torpedo tubes or light guns, the new type of naval fighting craft has done much to help the Italians kep back the Teutonic invasion.

It was one of these fast motor boats, according to reports to-day, which recently passed the barriers of the Venetian Gulf, cruised out across the Adriatic, slipped through the mine fields at the Gulf of Trieste, entered the harbour blew up the Austrian battleship Wein—and got safely away. There have been numerous other instances where these little wasps of the sea have harrassed the enemy dreadnoughts and cruisers.

Their great speed makes them extremely difficult to hit and their torpedo sting is just as deadly as that of a super-submarine.

The motor boats, every one around Venice firmly believes, will keep the Queen City of the seas beyond range of the enemy's guns. The more religious of the inhabitants of islands of the Venetian gulf have an additional reason for confidence. It is that the Island of Durano, on which is the church of St. Martin, holds the body of Saint Barbara, patron saint of Venice.

Coupled with the present assault on the Asiago plateau, and the drive around Monte Crappa, the battle now raging along the northern lagoons of the Gulf of Venice constitutes the Austro-German's third simultaneous effort to crumple up the Piave front.

DOG AFFLICTED WITH RABIES

Animal's Lower Jaw is Paralyzed

Another dog exhibiting marked symptoms of rabies has been reported in the city. The dog, which is owned by a London Street man, is afflicted with what is known as dumb rabies. The animal's lower jaw is paralysed, according to a diagnosis made by Dr Fortune, veterinary surgeon.

The case will be reported to the authorities at Ottawa.

Mr. Simons, the manager of the Jos. Longo & Co.'s fruit and fish store, 230 Charlotte street, has decorated his premises very prettily for the Christmas trade. The window and interior of the store has been hung with colored festoons, bells, and other holiday decorations appropriate for the season. The Christmassy effect is quite novel and charming, bright, cheery and merry, as old St. Nicholas could make it.

The store is packed with Christmas fruits fresh from foreign growers, and at most moderate prices. Splendid California oranges for the holiday table, and grapes, as well as Malaga grapes, grape fruit, lemons, apples, tangerines, bananas, figs, dates, nuts, relishes, etc. There is also a display of fine hot-house vegetables, tomatoes, cucumbers, onions, lettuce, celery, cauliflower, etc. Choice canned goods, jams, jellies, marmalade, catsups, sauces, prunes, olives, table raisins, and other delicacies. Step in and see the store in Christmas dress. dtf.-141

WHAT 185,000 H.-P. MEANS.

Would Require Huge String of Animals to Start Ship Moving.

After figuring awhile on what 185,000 horse-power—the installation of electric drive on a new warship—really means, John Q. Everson, of Pittsburg, sends to the Scientific American a graphic comparison. If the ship were to be pulled along by 185,000 horses, two abreast, the team would be 175 miles long. If such a team were to start from New York its leading pair of horses would be well beyond Havre de Grace on the way to Baltimore before the vessel it was pulling had left Jersey City.

ITALY'S BIG NEED IS WHEAT BREAD

MEAGRE ALLOWANCE HAS BEEN DEPLETED BY REFUGEES FROM THE FRONT

ROME, Dec. 18.—Wheat bread is the most important need of Italy's civilian population, according to the report of the committee on refugees, of the American Red Cross, made by Ernest P. Bicknell, director-general of civilian relief; Prof. Edward T. Devine and Captain Paul U. Kellogg, who have just completed a three weeks' tour of towns and cities throughout Italy.

It was found that the half million persons, mostly women and children, refugees from the invaded districts, now scattered through every section of Italy, had diminished the already meagre bread allowance ration of the ordinary population.

The committee has secured a contribution of 200,000 lire for the aid of the population of Venice, 20,000 of whom are being removed to Rimini and other points. It is probable that the entire population will be removed, owing to the difficulty of bringing in supplies and because there is no longer employment for workmen. Venice is already so greatly depopulated that on the night Captain Kellogg was there he found himself the only person walking on the piazza of St. Mark.

BURNED BRITISH FLAG IN ITALY LAST JULY

GERMAN INFLUENCE INCITED ITALIAN RIOT.

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—"We Italians will not quit until the Germans and Austrians are out of Italy," said Capt. Nestore Cacciapuatti, yesterday. Capt. Cacciapuatti was overseas for two years, in which he rose from the rank of second-lieutenant to captain. He served with the 18th Regiment of Italian artillery, and also acted in the capacity of secretary to a general in one of Italy's military hospitals.

"Were you in Turin at the time of the bread riots in July last?" he was asked. "At the time they burned the British flag in the public square."

"It was all German propaganda," he said, hotly. "We were expecting three ships laden with wheat and they did not come. Italy had a reserve amount of wheat put away for the last extremity and the Prefect should have distributed it. But Giolette was the idol of the Germans and the neutral party—he didn't want Italy to fight at all. He and Von Buelow worked together and the Prefect did not distribute the wheat. The Italian people were told that Britain had seized the ships and confiscated the wheat—as a matter of fact two of the ships were sunk by German submarines. But the people were hungry. They rioted. They destroyed two churches, many people were killed. They cried 'Down with England' and they burned the British flag in the public square."

CASES OF DELAY IN ARRIVAL OF PAY CHEQUES

Mr. Dobbin Will Take Matter Up If Reports Are Made to Him

Several cases of delay in the arrival of the separation allowance and assigned pay cheques for the dependents of men on service have been reported. These have, where possible been adjusted. Such cases generally intervene in the facts that the man on service has returned from overseas, and his pay and allowance account has not been transmitted from England. Until such account is received at Ottawa, further payments have not been made.

If there are any cases of non-arrival of cheques, and such are reported to Mr. Dobbin at the Patriotic Fund office, the matter will at once be taken up with the assigned pay branch, and the difficulty put in the way of being remedied. On attention being called, the Department will at once make an effort to have the matter rectified.

Canadian Press Despatch:

CHICAGO, Dec. 19.—Demands for wage increases of from 10 to 40 per cent. were submitted to 75 thousand locomotive firemen on the railroads in the United States for a vote to-day. The demands were drawn up by committees of the Trainmen's Brotherhoods. Instructions sent to firemen say the vote is not on the question of a strike.

Farmers' Exemption Appeals Are Being Tabulated By Tribunal At The Court House

More than one hundred and thirty "A2" farmers have field their exemption appeals with Warden Brown and his assistant, Mr. Knox. This morning four new cases were heard, and there are a number of others expected before this tribunal has completed its work.

"We are classifying the appeals we have heard," Warden Brown explained. "We feel that not one man should be taken from the farms, but we do not intend to recommend that all these men should be exempted. Some of them have strong claims. These we shall recommend for exemption. There are others that deserve every consideration, and there are some we do not feel justified in recommending.

The Warden pointed out that the need of men on the farms must be regarded as one of the most urgent problems the Dominion has to face. The conditions last Spring were favourable to the large crop that was realized in the fall. It was generally recognized that the year was an unusual one, but what will be the results in 1918, should the weather militate against the big harvest the people expect. The farmers state that the scarcity of help would multiply and intensify their difficulties. They fear to contemplate such a combination of obstacles, and it is the haunting shadow of such possibilities that the farmers' representatives are mindful of in their disposition of the appeals from the townships. City dwellers may be blind to the results of a light harvest, of a drought in the dairy season and of other agricultural disappointments, but by the very law of averages it is unlikely that two successive years will be as productive as 1917. Hence in protecting the interests of the individual farmers the special tribunal feels that it is safeguarding the general interests of the Dominion in providing for the maintenance of food supplies.

FARMER "FEELING FINE THESE DAYS

Pains in Back Almost Bent Him Double" Before Taking Tanlac

"I'm feeling simply fine these days but before I began taking this Tanlac I was just in misery nearly all the time," said Henry Walker, of Puslinch, R. R. No. 3, Hamilton. Mr. Walker is a well-to-do farmer, and one of the best known and respected men living in his vicinity.

"My kidneys have been bothering me off and on for several years," continued Mr. Walker, "and the pains in my back almost bent me double. My stomach was in a bad fix and I had come to where I couldn't eat without suffering afterwards. I had no appetite and just had to force down the little I did eat. I was so run-down and played out that I never felt like doing much on the farm, and the least little job of work would tire me completely out. One day I met my friend, Bill Cairns, and I had such an awful pain in my back that I was all stooped over. When I told him what the trouble was he told me to go and get Tanlac, saying he had taken it and that he was feeling years younger

"So, I bought a bottle on his say so, and now I'm feeling fine myself. Why, my appetite is better than it has been in a long time and the folks at home sometimes express the fear that I might hurt myself by eating too much. But I just tell them not to be uneasy, my stomach feels alright, and as I have been denied the pleasure of eating for so long I want to make up for lost time. I haven't been taking Tanlac very long and I'm going to keep on taking it, but I haven't had any of those doublingup pains since I started on it. My kidneys don't bother me any more, my strength is rapidly coming back, and I'm getting to where I can put in a good day's work and feel none the worse from it. Yes, sir, Tanlac has made me feel fine and it's a pleasure to recommend it to other people."

W. H. Dunsford, Esq.,
Treasurer Serbian Relief Fund,
Peterborough.

Dear sir,—I have very great pleasure in acknowledging your cheque for $790.89 which you sent me as a result of the circular appeal in Peterborough. It is a splendid response, and I will be glad if you will convey to the members of your committee the hearty thanks of the Canadian Serbian Relief Committee for the work they have done in bringing about such an excellent result. I note that you say expenses were met by the proceeds of a lecture by Miss Losanitch, so that this committee does not stand in your debt at all.

Again thanking you for all your trouble.

Yours very truly,

Season's Greetings From Our "Heintzman Hall"

Music-Loving Peterborough Amply Demonstrated by the Remarkably Large Number of Sales Made By This Local Piano House

On this big Festive occasion, everyone forgets, or tries to forget, the stern realities of life. It's the festal season, when all try to be merry, and to help making all about us happy, both young and old.

"One thing we have learned since coming to Peterborough," said Mr. Britton, the Manager of "Heintzman Hall," "is that there are thousands of people in this city and country whose hearts are a great deal larger than their pocket books. They want to give so many presents of Pianos and Victrolas that they are sorry they cannot afford money for all of them."

"Have you found the Christmas trade up to your expectations, Mr. Britton," asked the newspaper man. "One would have thought the Victory Bond campaign would have affected piano sales very materially."

"The very reverse has been the case with us," replied Mr. Britton. "I am pleased to be able to say that the piano business with Ye Olde Firme of Heintzman & Co. never blossomed out in Peterborough to the same extent as it has done this season, and, I may add, this whole year."

This was a more optimistic statement than we were prepared to hear about the piano trade. It had been surmised that there was no heavy demand for pianos or musical instruments running into the three or four figures, and that piano manufacturers, especially, were not enjoying the prosperity they are "accused" of. The increased cost of living, and the fact that many of the piano trade's customers are still at the front, would, it was felt, create serious inroads into this business.

"Would it be impertinent, Mr. Britton, to inquire as to the volume of business done by "Heintzman Hall" during the past year?"

"Well, we are modest people in Heintzman Hall, and never like "blowing our own horn." But if it will serve to show that there is no trade depression in Peterborough, at least in connection with the Heintzman & Co. business, I don't mind letting you into a little of our business secrets. Of course, it's too soon to give any details of our Christmas season business, which, up to the present, is exceeding our most sanguine expectations. But looking over our sales books up to December 1st, I find that we have entered upwards of six hundred sales contracts for instruments, including pianos and Victrolas— an average of over fifty sales per month. This number represents a lot of money, and is particularly gratifying when you consider that we have only been a little over a year in Peterborough altogether. The sales of Victrola records has also been exceptionally large."

Pretty encouraging showing this, it was admitted, for one piano business in Peterborough, especially during such war time and election disturbances. It would seem that war time is music time. Music is said to be the mainspring of patriotism. It stirs the blood, cheers the heart and fosters the national spirit—it appeals to young and old. It was remarked by Mr. Britton that the great number of martial selections sold by "Heintzman Hall" for Victrolas and Sonoras proved that the people like to hear the inspiring strains of march music like "O, Canada," and others. Let there be music in the homes this Christmas.

"One thing I would particularly like you to do," said Mr. Britton, "is to ask the Press to express my gratitude to the people of Peterborough for having so generously contributed to the success of "Heintzman Hall" during the past year, and on my behalf, to wish one and all a "Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year."

To make this coming Christmas a purposeful, earnest Christmas—and a cheerful one, a visit to "Heintzman Hall" to witness the large exhibit of musical instruments, and to hear the recitals in the sound-proof rooms, will well repay anyone. In addition to the splendid display of new pianos, Victrolas and Sonoras in the show rooms, there are quite a number of slightly used organs and pianos which the firm desire to clear during the Christmas season in order to swell the volume of the Christmas trade. 1d-1w.

Bigamy Case Heard of in etc.

the evidence which the Chief was prepared to submit, claiming that the prisoner had not been properly warned when the evidence was obtained.

Chief Thompson said that Oakes volunteered the evidence in question and furthermore was not under arrest at the time the evidence was obtained. The Chief said that Oakes admitted that he had been previously married and knew he had done wrong.

This concluded the evidence. Mr. Gordon said that there would be no defence, as he proposed to rely on the law which presumes a person to be dead after a continuous absence of seven years. Mr. Gordon endeavoured to prove that Oakes' first wife had been absent for a longer period than seven years.

Crown Attorney Hatton rebutted this presumption with evidence to show that some four or five years after the separation the accused had sent Christmas cards to the two children of his first wife. In addition to this, wife number one claims that she saw Oakes some time after the separation. On this occasion he was working on a telephone line near her father's home, and she saw him from the window. He did not look in.

The case went to the jury this afternoon.

Prizes Given Away

Five valuable Prizes will be given away at Yeates Bros. Bowling Alleys, George Street, for the three highest successive scores in any one game. One prize only to each player. This Contest begins on Wednesday, 19th December, and will close Christmas night. Everyone has a chance to win a prize.

Peel Off The Old Skin; Bring Out The New

You know that beneath that muddy, over-red or blotchy complexion you have a skin that's clear, soft and white. If you could only have this more beautiful skin exposed to view instead of the horrid old skin you now behold in your mirror! You can—and by a very simple, harmless process which you can use yourself. Get an ounce of common mercolized wax at your druggist's and this evening spread a thin coating of it over your face. To-morrow morning wash it off with warm water. Small powder-like particles of the lifeless top skin will come off with the wax. Repeat this daily until all the worn-out scarf skin has been absorbed. Then you'll have a lovelier, healthier looking complexion than you now think possible. Chaps, pimples, spots, freckles, or other surface disfigurements are of course removed with the skin itself. If your skin be wrinkled or flabby, bathe the face daily for awhile in a lotion made by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. This is just splendid.

Have you seen the Gold Fish in the Aquarium of the Peterborough Floral Co., Water St.? Beautiful and interesting household ornaments. Bring the kiddies to see them.

THE GREATEST Happiness Comes TO OURSELVES WHEN WE MAKE OTHERS HAPPY WITH OUR GIFTS

The value of a gift consists not in costliness or variety, but in the feelings of affection, or regard, or sympathy, or honor, which it is supposed to carry. It is time that both giver and receiver realized this. Too often the spirit of Christmas is utterly sacrificed in the contest between the desire to spend and the duty of refraining. For a gift to be worth the giving, no sacrifice of duty must have entered into it. A tiny flower given in love and simplicity is better than a rare and costly gem procured with worry, anxiety and doubt. When you give something to wear, you exhibit good sense, good taste and good judgment.

The Best Gifts for Boys are Suits and Overcoats

Boys' clothing purchased here is sure to give universal satisfaction. Built for hard wear and guaranteed throughout, it is hard to think of anything that would please the boy so much as to find one of our good suits or overcoats awaiting him Christmas morning.

Frank Gotch The Wrestling Champ Died Yesterday

DES MOINES, Iowa, Dec. 18.—Frank A. Gotch, retired champion heavyweight wrestler of the world, died at noon on Sunday at his home, Humboldt, Iowa, of uraemic poisoning. He had been in failing health for two years.

Gotch was 41 years old. The record books detailing the events of his life give his age as 39 years, but these are incorrect. He was born on 27th April, 1876, on a farm near Humboldt. His wife and son were at the bedside when death came.

It is said that the famous athlete was conscious almost up to the time of death, despite rumours that have been in circulation during the past two months that he was irrational part of the time.

Gotch won the undisputed wrestling championship of the world in 1908 by defeating George Hackenschmidt, "the Russian lion," at the Dexter Park Pavilion, Chicago, in a forfeited match after two hours of gruelling wrestling.

There was no fall in the match, but the invader quit, exhausted, after two hours of effort against a man who plainly showed that he was superior in every respect.

PREMIER SMILING OVER THE RESULTS

MINISTERS HEADING FOR OTTAWA TO ATTEND IMPORTANT CABINET MEETINGS.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—Sir Robert Borden was all smiles this morning over the result of the elections. He was at his office early, where he was overwhelmed with congratulations on the great victory for the Unionists. All of the Cabinet Ministers are heading for Ottawa, and they will tackle immediately the accumulation of work left up by the election campaign. There will be a series of important Cabinet meetings at once.

The two French-Canadian Cabinet Ministers, Hon. Albert Sevigny, and Hon. Pierre Blondin, were both defeated, and as it would seem impossible to secure a riding for them in Quebec, seats will either have to be found in Ontario, or the West, or the French-Canadians be left without Cabinet representation.

There is but one French-Canadian Government supporter elected in the whole of Canada, Dr. J. L. Chabot, for Ottawa. There is talk of his being taken into the Cabinet.

TO TEACH JIU GITSU IN UNCLE SAM'S ARMY

Authorities in Massachusetts Section Think Men Will Get Right Among the Foe.

BOSTON, Dec. 19.—Jiu jitsu, the Japanese art of deftly breaking a man's neck or shattering an arm while wrestling, is to be taught New England's national army soldiers for use in hand-to-hand battling when they go over the top.

The jiu jitsu will give the soldiers their final means of defence for fighting on the battlefields of Europe. It's to be used only when rifle and bayonet have been lost in the fray and they meet the Huns in the grim man-to-man combat for life. The imparting of the art to the enlisted men will be a matter left to the discretion of their officers. Officials figure that command of the art is so dangerous a thing in irresponsible hands that there will be many men not qualified to be intrusted with its secrets.

Boxing has aided much in the bayonet work, and with the jiu jitsu announcement comes further evidence that athletics play a big part in the making of a modern soldier. A school of 80 officers are now studying military games.

U. S. ORDERS MANY ENFIELD RIFLES

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 17. — Major-General Crozier, Chief of U. S. ordnance, in the annual report of his bureau made public to-day shows that up to June 30th, orders had been placed for one million Enfield rifles, details for the re-chambering of the British standard gun for American ammunition having been completed June 1.

On the machine-gun situation, General Crozier says, that several types of weapons have been found efficient by the machine gun board; but that procurement of an adequate supply was a question of securing deliveries.

It is shown in the report that all American field guns are to be similar in calibre to the French "Seventy-Fives," which have been so much discussed since the war began. The French semi-automatic breech mechanism also has been adopted in modified form, so that American and French batteries in France can be served from the same ammunition factories. Anti-aircraft guns of the "Seventy-Five" type also have been adopted.

The production of large calibre mobile artillery, that is, weapons of the type of the German forty-two centimetre guns, appears to be the chief source of delay in the army's equipment.

SO LONG LETTY.

It is a long time since a Peterborough audience has enjoyed a musical comedy as much as "So Long Letty" was enjoyed at the Grand Opera House last night. This fast-moving melange of lively music, pretty girls and funny situations comes from the Pacific Coast and therefore was not heralded as much as the other musical shows seen here, most of which hail from New York. It was personally endorsed by Mr. W. F. Turner however, and Peterborough theatregoers have learned to know that such endorsation means something. "So Long Letty" was a treat from the first al drop of the curtain. With a quarbars of the opening overture to the finlette of capable fun-makers, a caste of clever principals and a vivacious young chorus that not only looked pretty, but could sing and dance as well, the production travelled at a mile-a-minute clip, and there was not a dull moment anywhere. As Letty, Gladys Lockwood was a scream. She had the audience with her all the way and her song, 'They Go Wild Over Me,' scored a big hit. Marguerite Sale was equally funny as the leaping Grace Miller, and Hobart Cavanagh as Harry Miller, uncorked as amusing a line of slang as has come over the footlights at the Grand in a long time. Jack Pollard, the fourth member of the fun-making quartette, was fully up to the standard of the others.

Bright specialties were introduced, and the graceful dancing of Una Fleming was a thoroughly appreciated feature. The costumes were magnificent and some of the ensemble scenes were a riot of colours and movement.

As for the musical numbers too much cannot be said. The music was catchy all the way, with the "So Long Letty" number propably scoring the biggest triumph.

An augmented orchestra, under the direction of Joseph A. Tressi, was an outstanding feature of the production. Peterborough audiences usually take an orchestra for granted, but last night the musicians were applauded after every number and the acrobatic violinist came in for special notice. The members of the Grand Orchestra fitted in well with the visitors and were complimented by the director on their performance.

The work of the orchestra added to the merit of the performance on the stage, made it difficult for the audience to say "So Long Letty". Their sentiments would be more fittingly expressed by "Au Revoir Letty."

VICTORIA, B.C., Dec. 18.—Word has been received here that Flight-Lieut. Joseph Gorman, R.N.A.S., has died as a result of a fractured skull and other injuries sustained, presumably in an accident. The advices gave the date of his death as December 16, at Padua, Italy. He had been on the Italian front for a month.

Lieut. Gorman was 28 years old and a member of a well-known Ottawa family, where he was born and educated. GENERAL GOETHALS IS OFFERED POST AS HEAD OF WAR COUNCIL IN FAR-REACHING ARMY SHAKE-UP

Senators at Inquiry Demand Younger Men in Bureaus and Modern Efficiency—General Crozier Puts In a Very Uneasy Day—Senator Chamberlain Exclaims: "Your Explanations Are Not Satisfactory."

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 20. — A revolutionary shake-up in the staff departments of the army was begun yesterday by the appointment of a war Council and the relief of several of the chiefs of bureaus from active control of their commands.

The post of Quartermaster-General has been offered to Major General George W. Goethals, and it is believed that he will accept and will bring to the supplying of the American troops all the high efficiency he exhibited in building the Panama Canal. Major General Henry G. Sharpe, now the Quartermaster General, will be assigned to another post, and will sit in the War Council.

Provost Marshal General Crowder is the only officer delegated to the War Council who will continue in active control of his department at the same time. Major General Weaver will be relieved as chief of the Coast Artillery Corps by Brigadier General John D. Barrette, recently at Camp Upton.

Major General William Crozier, chief of the Ordnance Bureau, who has been under fire in the Senate Committee investigating lack of ordnance for the army, and Major General Bliss, who has just returned from Europe, have been named to sit in the War Council, and will be relieved as the active chiefs of their departments.

YOUNGER OFFICERS IN DEMAND.

"Younger and more active officers will be selected to take up their work," it was explained at the War Department. At the same time assurance was given that the present activity of Congress in learning why the American Army has not been fully equipped in ordnance and stores had nothing to do with the shake-up and the organization of a War Council.

The Council will act in an advisory capacity to the Secretary of War, it was said, and will be an elastic organization. Officers returning from Europe with valuable experience will be appointed from time to time, and many of those appointed to the Council will not lose their places as heads of departments. They will, however, be relieved of administrative work so they may give most of their time to the matters before the Council.

Several high officers under the Quarter-master General are to be shifted, it is quite certain. If General Goethals accepts the appointment it is probable that he will organize the vast purchasing organization along his own lines. There has been much friction between the Quarter-master General's department and the civilian committees appointed by the Council of National Defence to assist in the work of purchasing supplies for the army.

Members of the Senate Military Affairs Committee bluntly stated their dissatisfaction with the War Department's explanations of delays in equipping the American troops with necessary munitions. Major General Crozier again was called to testify all day, and Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the committee, told him the public would not be satisfied with his excuses for failure in obtaining ordnance.

ARTILLERY SHELLS FAR SHORT

General Crozier admitted that less than three per cent. of this year's artillery programme has been completed. The programme called for the delivery of 78,00,000 shells for the mobile artillery before July 1, 1918, the end of the present fiscal year. To date only 2,000,000 shells have been delivered, he said.

Members of the committee pressed General Crozier with questions about red tape in the Ordnance Bureau, clashes of authority between officers in the War Department and an alleged practice of the War Department of discouraging inventions by men outside the department. The committee directed a sharp fire of quqestions at the "paper endorsement system" under which officers are required to write out the simplest questions they wish to ask each other.

"The public thinks that there is too much system and not enough action," said Senator Hitchcock. "Have you done anything to get quick action? That's the one big essential in war time."

General Crozier replied he had employed an efficiency expert to help him work out a scheme for eliminating some of the red tape in his Bureau. He urged also the establishment of more individual responsibility among the officials of the War Department.

The General told how on April 5th, the day before the declaration of war against Germany, the War Department asked Congress for a lump appropriation of $232,000,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. He declared that Congress insisted upon an itemized statement of the estimate and the result was that the funds did not become available until June 15. Members of the committee resentful of the effort to hold Congress responsible for the delay, sharply reminded General Crozier that considerable balances of the 1918 army appropriations remained unexpended until long after war was declared.

U.S. Saw Wounded Canadians Disembark For First Time

Americans Were Impressed With Scene, Familiar in Canada, But New to Them, When Big Liner Docked

AN ATLANTIC PORT, Dec. 19. — The first ship to put in at an American port, carying as its cargo human war wreckage—the wounded and maimed from the battlefields in France—arrived here to-day. It was a British liner with more than 2,000 Canadians aboard.

Under normal conditions the ship would have gone direct to Halifax. Owing to the explosion which partially wrecked that city the convalescent wounded were taken off here, and will be sent to Canada by train as rapidly as possible.

Canadian officers and their staffs are here to care for the wounded. Arrangements have been made for special docking privileges for the ship, which will bring the wounded men as close to transportation centres as possible so that they can readily be moved in ambulances to Dominion-bound trains.

NEW SCENES FOR U. S.

Scenes new to America, despite the fact that she has been in the war since April, were presented as the British ship moved slowly up the bay to-day. Men with heads bandaged and swathed in yards of gauze, men with their arms strapped tightly to their bodies, or hobbling on crutches, were to be seen lining the rails. These were the most lightly wounded soldiers. More serious cases were below decks. It was to care for them that ambulances were summoned from hospitals, and automobiles were sent hurrying toward the waterfront.

LOOKED QUEER IN WAR PAINT.

Included among the wounded were men who fought at Vimy Ridge. Of the total number of wounded, upward of one-fourth were officers.

The British Red Cross flag flew from the mast of the liner, as she brought her touch of war closer to America. In her war paint, a dizzy mixture of lines and colours, the liner made her way through warships now in the harbour and proceeded toward her pier, after being quickly passed by officials of the port.

RAILWAY WORK GOING ON WELL.

Halifax North Street Station is being Regularly Used, Dr. Reid Says.

Ottawa, Dec. 19. — Hon. Dr. Reid, Minister of Railways and Canals, received information from Halifax today that all work in connection with the railway buildings is progressing very satisfactorily, that materials and men are arriving quickly and that the elevator will be operating again this week. When he left on Saturday, Hon. Dr. Reid says, trains were running regularly into the North St. Station.

The Minister expects to have temporary houses ready for his railway men within a couple of weeks.

New York Sun: Already in the great war emergency through which the nation is passing the folly of the philosophy which has hamstrung the transportation system of the continent has been made apparent. The inadequacy of the railroads to meet the demnads made on them is directly attributable to he hampering laws hat prejudice and ignorance have put on the books in the past, and until those enactments are revised in the light of reason and experience, there can be no permanent improvement in the situation and little temporary mitigation of the conditions which now exist.

"THE FILM OF FEAR"

By ARNOLD FREDERICKS

Whether this was the case or not, nothing, he reflected, was to be gained by remaining where he was. Drawing an automatic pistol from his pocket, he held it in readiness in his right hand, then, raising his left arm he flung his entire weight against the partly opened door.

The door yielded to his attack. Then there came a dull thud as though some heavy body had fallen to the floor, and immediately after the hallway resounded with a series of unearthly screams.

Duvall still moved forward. Then, to his utter surprise there appeared in the darkness a grotesque figure, which immediately hurled itself upon him and began to clutch frantically at his throat.

CHAPTER XVIII.

It would be difficult to describe the feelings of Grace Duvall when, after having traced the mysterious woman who had attacked Ruth Morton, to the flat at Columbus Avenue and Ninety-sixth Street, she had foolishly entered the place, and allowed herself to be attacked.

The woman's onslaught had been so sudden, so unexpected, that Grace was entirely unable to offer any defense.

Her cries for help had been smothered at once and with the woman's thin but muscular fingers clutching at her throat, she found herself forced violently back upon a low couch that stood immediately behind her.

For a few moments she struggled violently, striving with both her hands to break her assailant's hold upon her, but her efforts were in vain. Slowly she realized that she was being choked into unconsciousness. The objects in the room, the woman's set face, whirled dimly before her eyes, and everything became blank.

When she once more recovered consciousness, she found herself still lying upon the couch. Her throat ached fearfully, and there was a dull roaring in her head.

She opened her eyes and looked about. The room was quite dark. Only a very faint glow came through the windows at its further end—the dim reflection of the lights in the street. So far as she could determine, she was alone.

She tried to move her arms, her feet, but found them bound fast. A moment later she realized that a piece of cloth of some sort, tightly rolled, had been forced into her mouth. She could not utter a sound.

There was no one in the room, but from the one which adjoined it in the rear came the murmur of voices.

By twisting her head about, she was able to learn that the door connecting the two was ajar, and through the narrow opening came a thin ribbon of light.

As her senses became clearer, she realized that two persons were in the room beyond her, and from the sounds they made, the words which from time to time came to her ears, it appeared that they were engaged in the operation of packing.

At first the words that filtered through the partly open doorway were mere fragments of conversation — words spoken here and there in a slightly higher key, and therefore distinguishable to her. She made out that her captors supposed her to be still unconscious—that they were preparing to leave the place.

"There's no hurry," she presently heard one of the women say, in a somewhat louder voice. "If she had had friends outside waiting for her, they would have come to her rescue long ago. I'm sure nobody knows where she is."

"And her husband had gone long before I left the house. I was watching, and he first went to a saloon on the corner, and then drove off in a taxicab. So I couldn't have been followed here."

"No. But I think we ought to get away as soon as possible. When does that train go?"

"Not until half past five."

"We'll have to wait in the station then."

"Why not here?"

"Because that woman's husband when she fails to return to-night, is certain to look for her. She probably came in a cab, and he might trace her that way. My advice is to leave here as soon as possible. Have you finished packing that suit case?"

"No, not quite. What do you propose to do with Jack?"

"I was going to do him with me."

"I don't see how you can do that."

"Why not?"

"Because if any attempt is made to swallow s, he would be a certain means of identification.

There was silence for a time. Grace heard the sounds of drawers being opened and shut, as the two women hurried through their task. Who was Jack? she wondered. There had been no sounds to indicate the presence of a third person in the next room.

Presently she heard the voices again.

"I think the whole affair has been a mistake, anyway," one of them said petulantly. "I don't see what you have gained by it."

"I've gotten my revenge on that baby-faced Morton girl. The stuck-up thing. I'll bet she won't act again in a hurry. What right has she to be getting a thousand a week, when they wouldn't give me a chance at any price. I may not be as good-looking as she is, but I'm a better actress. I to follow us. He would be a certain rector I wouldn't do—that's why I did not get the job. And after running down to the studio every day for three weeks, too. I hate her, I tell you. I hope that she is never able to act again." The woman spoke with an intensity, a violence, that made Grace shudder.

"How do you ever suppose they came to connect me with the matter?" the other woman said after a time. "They didn't know my address at the studio. And even if they had, I have never been seen with you. I don't see why they ever suspected me."

"I don't know. That man Duvall is pretty shrewd, though. I did manage to get away from him the other night. I'd like to have seen his face when he got back to the cab and found me gone."

"His wife followed you here, from the hotel, I suppose. You took an awful chance."

"I don't understand how she traced me. I knew that she was following me, and when she saw me go up in the elevator at the hotel I expected her to come, too. I was afraid they might prevent me from coming down, while they were coming up, so I walked down. I watched from the stairs, and saw her and the clerk get out of the elevator on the floor where that girl's apartment was. Then I came down the stairs and went out the side entrance. I knew she was upstairs, when I left, and I don't see how she traced me."

"That's just about it. And if he did, like as not he's waiting for her yet."

The other woman laughed.

"Nice wait he'll have," she said.

"That's all very well, but won't he see us going out?"

"Suppose he does. Anyway, it is dark, and we'll wear veils. And, we won't go together. But I don't think he'll wait so long."

"If he doesn't, he'll go back to the hotel and report, and then the woman's husband will be up here in no time. I think we had better get out now. You'll have to leave your trunk. There's nothing much in it."

Again there was a long silence. Then Grace heard the door open and the two women came into the room carrying their suit cases. She closed her eyes, and pretended to be unconscious.

One of the women paused beside her.

"If they don't find out where she is," she whispered to her companion, "she's likely to stay here, and starve to death."

"I shouldn't be sorry," the other snarled. But if you feel badly about it it's easy enough to telephone to-morrow and tell the janitor to let her out. No chance of a cab, I guess."

"No. Not at this hour. We'll take the car down to Forty-second street, and cross over. Are you ready?"

"Yes. I'd better put out the light, though."

"All right." The first woman moved to the door, while the second returned to the bedroom and snapped off the light. A moment later Grace saw her ghostly figure pass the couch and then the snapping of the door latch told her that she was alone.

The thought was anything but a pleasant one. If Richard did not happen to remember Leary—she knew that she had mentioned him in connection with the address on the torn card he had given her—it was by no means impossible that she might lie where she was, helpless, for days. And in that event, starvation, or what was worse, thirst, might very readily serve to fulfil the woman's predictions. She shivered at the thought of spending hours, days, in this place alone.

But was she alone? Until now, she had supposed so, in spite of the woman's remarks about "Jack," for she had heard not the slightest sound. Presently she became aware of a slow, regular scraping sound, that seemed to come from one of the rear rooms. It suggested something alive, something moving about with stealthy footsteps. Then, all of a sudden, there came a loud crash.

Grace gave an involuntary cry, or what would have been a cry, had she not been so effectually gagged. The knowledge that she lay helpless, unable to protect herself from attack, frightened her. She turned her head, straining her eyes into the semi-darkness. Something, some figure, was moving toward her from the bedroom, gliding along with swaying, noiseless steps. What it was, she could not determine; from its appearance against the darkness of the door-way, it looked like a crawling figure in black.

Presently she heard the sound of breathing, and with it a mumbling noise, as though the apparition were talking to itself. Two eyes seemed to gleam through the darkness. There was a hissing yet guttural sound, human in quality, yet horrible to her ears.

With a gasp of fear, Grace turned and buried her face in the pillows. Fingers seemed clutching at her hair. An arm, wearing a silken sleeve, brushed her cheek, lay across her throat. A low voice muttered unintelligibly in her ear, filling her with horror. She felt her senses reeling. She thought herself about to faint.

Then, in a moment, the creature was gone, and she heard it moving noisily about the further end of the room.

From time to time there came a crash, as though in the darkness it had upset something. Then would follow long, uncanny periods of stillness, broken only by the horrible muttering. She lay with her head buried in the pillows, wondering at what instant the figure would again appear at her side.

For a long time she remained thus, straining her ears to keep track of the creature's movements. And as the moments passed, she began to take courage to hope that since no harm had as yet been offered her, the thing in the room, whatever it was, might not come near her again.

Suffered Great Agony FROM PAIN IN STOMACH FOR OVER 5 YEARS

Most of the misery and ill-health that humanity is burdened with arises from disorders of the stomach. Sour and bowels. If you are feeling out of sorts, have pains in the stomach, especially after eating, bilious spells, headaches, sour stomach, coated tongue, sallow or muddy complexion, specks floating before the eyes, you should take a few doses of Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills and note the change.

Miss Ida Hogan, Duntobin, Ont., writes: "For over five years I have suffered great agony from pains in the stomach. I tried several remedies but got no relief until a friend advised me to take Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills. I started with two vials and before I had one quite used, I found much relief. I continued until I used four vials, and they have completely cured me. That was fourteen months ago and I have not had the slightest return since. The best praise I could give them is not enough."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

THE WITNESS

By OSCAR COX

After the war between the states there was ruin among the planters of the south. Randolph Etheredge, a young man whose father, Colonel Etheredge, had been killed at Shiloh and who himself had been wounded at Winchester, returned after the surrender to his plantation and endeavored to restore it to something like order. The fences had been burned for campfires; the outhouses had been torn down for lumber with which to build temporary quarters for the sick and wounded, and the negroes were scattered.

A few, it is true, remained, but they were so old as to be useless. Freedom to them meant a reliance on themselves at the close of their lives to which they had never been accustomed. They clung to the old plantation because it was home. The young owner made them as comfortable as he could, but to provide food and clothing for them was no easy matter.

James Lynch, a former overseer, had saved money and when Colonel Etheredge needed a loan had taken a mortgage on the plantation for funds advanced. Now that the new south was opening he was desirous of taking the property to himself and running it on the free labor principle. There being a long accumulation of unpaid interest, he went to the owner and demanded it. Etheredge asked for time. Lynch refused. Etheredge, knowing that his creditor was indebted to the colonel, his father, for all that he was, reproached him angrily. There was a quarrel, and Etheredge knocked the ex-overseer down. Lynch sued Etheredge for assault.

The only witness of the scuffle was Moses, a white haired old darky whom Lynch summoned for the prosecution. When Moses took the stand he laid a trembling hand on the rail before him and looked at the assembly mildly.

"Uncle Moses," said the prosecutor, "where were you on the 20th of June last, the day that Mr. Lynch visited Mr. Etheredge and a quarrel occurred between them?"

"Don't know no sech jusson."

"There he is," pointing to Lynch.

"Dat no Mr. Lynch. Dat Jim Lynch, oberseer. We used to call um Hardheart Lynch."

"Never mind what you used to call him. Tell us what you saw on the day he visited the Etheredge plantation."

"I saw de oberseer come on to de veranda, and Mars Etheredge he come out to meet him. Lynch he say to Mars Etheredge, 'I want me money what I loan de cunnel.' Mars Etheredge he say: 'Fust thing I got to do is git some salt pork and co'n pone fo de helpless niggers wot's too sic fo wo'k. Ma fadder tuk yo in when yo war starvin' and paid yo' big wages fo' "—

"I didn't ask you what was said. I asked you what was done," interrupted the lawyer, endeavoring by his severe tone to overawe the witness.

"How I gwine tole yo' wot war dat befo' I tole yo' wot war said?"

"Did you see Mr. Etheredge strike Mr. Lynch?"

"Yes, you did. You were there when it occurred."

"What did you see?"

"I sot Mars Etheredge point de finger ob scorn at de oberseer and say de cunnel gwine tuk him from starvin'."

"Stop there. If you don't tell me what you saw and not what you heard I'll ask his honor to commit you for contempt of court."

"His honah's not gwine to commit me fo' contempt o' nuttin' but dat mis'able specimen ob poo' white trash Jim Lynch."

By this time the faces of the jury and the spectators wore a broad grin, the witness looked placid and the prosecutor very much embarrassed. He would have dismissed the witness, but he was the only person who saw his client knocked down, and he must either make him so testify or lose the case. He returned to the work for persuadingly or, rather, strategically.

"Uncle Remus, did you ever see a man knocked down?"

"What dat?"

"Tell me—remember you are under oath—did you not see Mr. Etheredge do that to James Lynch?"

This was too much for the spectators, who burst into a roar. Etheredge spoke a few words to his counsel, who arose and said:

"Your honor, my client has requested me to refuse to proceed further in this case. If convicted he will pay whatever fine your honor chooses to impose."

"Case dismissed," said the judge "there being no evidence of the charge."

The court adjourned, and all went out convinced that the defendant had given the plaintiff his just deserts. Old Moses found himself a hero. He had been freed by the emancipation proclamation, but clung to the old plantation.

"The Phonograph with a Soul,"

For Christmas Before the Price Advances

In about one week all New Edison Phonographs will advance in price. You can save as much as $25 by purchasing NOW. This is an ACTUAL saving of CASH. Practise thrift by selecting your instrument AT ONCE.

OVER and above every other singular advantage, selecting The NEW EDISON this Christmas means saving money. While practically every leading Talking Machine Company has taken advantage of the heavy Christmas demand to increase their prices, The NEW EDISON will not be increased until January 1st, 1918.

The general increases are fair and necessary in view of the greatly increased cost of all materials, but it is his decision to delay the inevitable increases as long as possible—at least until everyone has had an opportunity of getting an Edison for Christmas—that again distinguishes Thomas A. Edison's consistent policy of considering the public first.

And that is not all. In addition to saving money by purchasing this wonderful instrument, The New Edison, NOW, through it you bring to your home the priceless gift of "Music's Re-creation." This, indeed, is greater than any price advantage. It is the most wonderful invention of the world's most wonderful inventor.

Come to our store today, while there is still time to obtain all the singular advantages of The NEW EDISON before the price advances.

POULTRY FEEDING

The problem of economical production, with feed at the present prices, is a question that has been worrying producers during the past few months. The question of what to feed is one that requires more careful consideration than ever before. Feed is high, therefore the flock should be culled closely and nothing but the most vigorous birds retained. They should not only be fed heavily, but should be fed such feeds as will give results. For this purpose it is necessary to supply cereal, animal, vegetable and mineral feeds.

Cereal or grain feeds should form the principal part of the ration and for best results a certain proportion should be ground. The question is what are the best and most economical feeds to use. During ordinary times, a mixture of corn, wheat and oats is popular, but under present conditions milling wheat should be conserved for human food and only the lower grades used for stock feed. Lower grade wheat, oats and corn, buckwheat and barley these are all feeds that may be used to advantage. The extent to which each is used will depend on prices.

For ground feed, "buckwheat screenings" may be used to advantage, also mixtures containing bran, cornmeal, ground oats or other similar grains.

Vegetable or green feed is absolutely necessary to keep the flock in thrifty condition. For this purpose, sprouted oats is one of the very best. It not only supplies succulence, but grain feed as well. Mangels, turnips, cabbage, small potatoes or other similar waste products may all be used to advantage.

Animal or meat feed is a form of food that poultry keepers frequently neglect supplying. It is not possible for a hen to produce eggs profitably on an all-grain ration. Sour milk is usually available on farms and no animal feed will give better results, as it not only supplies the necessary feed, but it also keeps the birds in good tone. If milk is not available, beef scrap, blood flour, green cut bone or similar feeds must be supplied to take the place of the grubs and insects which the birds get on range.

Mineral Feed—Lime for the egg shells and mineral salts for the growth of bone must be supplied. Small quantities may be obtained from such feeds as clovers, but it is necessary to feed oyster shells or something similar to supply lime in sufficient quantities for a heavy egg production.

Sample Ration.

Night—Full feed of scratch grains.

The scratch grains should be a mixture such as lower grade wheat, oats and corn—barley, oats and corn—barley, oats and buckwheat — or whatever grains are cheapest at the time. So far this season, oats have been the cheapest grain food, so it is advisable to use them to as great an extent as possible.

The present indications are that corn will be greatly reduced in price. When this happens it should be used extensively, as, supplemented with a high protein feed such as sour milk or beef scrap, it is one of the most valuable of feeds.

Besides the foregoing, a hopper of dry mash, such as ground buckwheat screenings three parts, blood flour or beef scrap one part, is kept constantly before the flock, also hoppers of oyster shell and meat scrap. If sour milk is available the beef scrap may be omitted or green cut bone may be supplied in place of either. A good time to supply this is at the noon feed when a mash made from the kitchen scraps in which is mixed the green cut bone, at the rate of about one-half ounce per bird and dried off with the meal mixture, may be fed.

Because feed is high in price, don't stint the flock. It takes a certain amount of feed merely for maintenance. It is only the feed over and above this amount that can be used for production, therefore feed and water liberally.

IT'S A GREAT STORY BUT IT ARRIVES LATE

Three new-born stars, which blazed up as a result of collisions or rather disasters in two other far-distant spiral nebulae, and then within a few months dimmed their fires until they could no longer be detected by the most powerfulin telescopes, have been discovered by Heber D. Curtis, of the Lick observatory of the University of California. He believes that it is perhaps twenty million years since these catastrophies occurred, but so vastly distant are the two spiral nebulae that only now has the light sent forth completed its journey through space

The special importance of the discovery is the evidence given in support of the belief that each of the spiral nebulae outside the Milky Way is an enormous universe of stars, comparable in vastness to the Milky Way in which we dwell. That the Milky Way itself is a vast spiral nebula is an opinion which is finding increased support among astronomers.

AH! A NEW ONE!

No human eye has seen the three stars—they were found by Dr. Curtis on stellar photographs. Recently he examined a photograph taken March 20, 1916, with the great Crossley reflecting telescope at the Lick observatory. The subject of this photograph was the nebula known as N. G. C. 4527. On the plate he found the image of a star which did not show on a photograph of the same region taken two months earlier. Examination of a photograph taken a month later showed that this new star had grown fainter; on a photograph taken six weeks later it was barely perceptible, and then it faded from the telescope's photographic eye.

The greatest value of the discoveries is the opportunity they have afforded Curtis to strengthen the "island universe" theory of the spiral nebulae. This theory is that each of the spiral nebulae is in itself a collection of suns at an almost unthinkable distance from our own universe.

LONG WAYS FROM DETROIT.

The new stars just found showed an average brightness of about the fifteenth magnitude. A star of the fifteenth magnitude in our own galaxy would be twenty thousand light years away—that is to say, it would take twenty thousand years for the light to come from such a star, although light travels at the rate of one hundred and eighty-six thousand miles a second. Dr. Curtis thinks these new stars may possibly have been of the thirtieth magnitude before their outburst and so as far as twenty million light years distant.

ATTACK ON CONVOY IS BEING PROBED

ADMIRAL BEATTY OPENS INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF SHIPS IN NORTH SEA

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—An Associated Press cable from London, dated Monday, December 17th, received here this morning says:—

"The successful attack by German warships on a convoy in the North Sea, resulting in the sinking of eleven vessels, as announced in the House of Commons to-day, came as an uncomfortable surprise to the British public. It is expected to cause a revival of the serious criticism of the Admiralty such as that of the time of the successful German attacks on a convoy of Scandinavian merchantmen in October. Added to this is the raid made off the Tyne last Wednesday by German warships. As a result of these two expeditions one British destroyer has been sunk, another seriously damaged, five trawlers and eight merchantmen have been sent to the bottom, another trawler has been damaged and a number of men have been killed, wounded or taken prisoner. Among the prisoners is a nephew of Viscount Grey, former Foreign Secretary.

According to Danish accounts the force which attacked the convoy consisted of four cruisers, in addition to destroyers. A painful aspect of the affair, from the British public's point of view, is that apparently all the attacking vessels escaped and returned to their bases. Another unpleasant feature is that the British cruiser squadron detailed to protect the convoy against surface attacks for some unexplained reason was not on the scene. Vice-Admiral Beatty immediately opened an inquiry and the first sitting was held yesterday, being conducted by Vice-Admirals Stanlee, De Robeck and Goodenough. The investigation will be hastened as much as possible.

According to the testimony of survivors, both here and in Scandinavia the fighting was of most violent character. The Germans poured hundreds of shots into the ill-fated vessels.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Triangular Love Difficulty

A War Veteran's Story

By CAPTAIN F. A. MITCHEL

Half a century has passed since we dashed out from the Rappahannock and the little village of Fredericksburg and started up the incline, with scarcely a house or a tree on it, toward the ridge, its base lined with Confederates waiting for us. But its picture is as sharply defined on my old brain as it was then on my young eyes. What! do over that tilted plain that at a word from the Confederate commander would be swept with a hailstorm of lead and iron? It was awful to think of then, and many a night since in my dreams I've been there again.

There was a deathly stillness, broken only by our monotonous tramp, before they opened on us. Jim Edmonds was marching next to me, and, turning, I saw that set look on his face which men wear when going into battle. Jim was as pale as a man walking to his execution. As I turned to look at him he faced me. I can never forget that look.

"I'm not coming out of this," he said.

I had no reply to make, and if I had and there would not have been time to make it, for at that moment the singing and the screeching, mingled with the rattle and the roar, began. We marched on, here and there a man dropping in his tracks, and the nearer we drew to the Confederates the more frequent the drops. Our regiment got as near to the gray death line as any, but the remnant at last broke like the rest. Why men were called upon to march up that open inclined plain, so admirably fitted for wholesale slaughter, is one of the many unaccountable blunders of the war.

Jim fell shortly after we broke. We were at the time, I think, about midway between the river and the ridge. He held out a hand to me, on which was a ring. He had lost the power of speech, but I knew what he wished me to do. I was to take the ring off his finger and put it on my own. Instead of doing so then and there, I took him up and carried him to the rear. When I put him down he was dead.

I must go back a bit. Jim had left a sweetheart at home. He had often talked about her to me. We were as near to each other as youngsters can be, and that is pretty near. We were very different, and I believe that helped to draw us together. Jim was confiding, and I was reticent. His face was a mirror for his feelings; I had perfect command over my features.

He would talk to me by the hour about his sweetheart. I had left one of my own at home, but I never mentioned her to any one. I couldn't. I wasn't built that way. I felt that it was contemptible in me to accept my friend's confidences and not give my own. Nevertheless I permitted him to pour them into my ear without a return.

One night, shortly before the battle in which Jim was killed, when he was talking about his betrothal by a campfire, he said to me: "You know how absorbed I am in Edith. Well, I've often thought that it is selfish on my part. I want her to make me happy. I haven't thought much about her happiness. Suppose I get killed. She will suffer the same as I would if I should hear of her death. I've been thinking about this and how her life would be spoiled. She wouldn't give her heart to any one else, for she would think that in doing so she would be untrue to me. I've formed a plan in case I am killed to prevent her living the lonely life of an old maid. There's but one man whom I can bear to think of as her husband."

"And who may that be?"

"You."

"I!"

"Yes. And, what's more, in case I don't get back home I wish you'd go to her and tell her so."

Now was the time, if ever, to confess that I had a sweetheart of my own. I was about to announce my natural reticence when it occurred to me that there was as much chance of my being knocked out by a shell or a bullet as Jim. Why not let the matter rest as it was? All I said was:

"Jim, you are very unselfish. Let's take a cheerful view of it. A soldier mustn't think of getting killed, though that's what we are here for. Let us, rather, dwell on both getting back home and my being best man at your wedding."

"That's all right if we get home. My plan is based on my getting killed. The day we left for Washington Edith took this ring off her finger and put it on mine. 'Jim,' she said, 'I'll never marry unless I marry the man that wears that ring.'

"She meant that she would marry no man but you."

"But don't you see how it works in with my plan for her?"

"No, I don't."

"Well, you will when I've told you the rest. If I am killed take this ring off my finger and put it on yours. It will overcome her scruples."

Our conversation was interrupted at this point and was never resumed, for we marched early the next morning and were soon laying pontoons in the face of the enemy's fire on the Rappahannock, and in getting across we marched up that incline which, as I have said, seemed to have been especially constructed for mowing down anything that happened to be on it.

Before putting Jim's body in the ground I took the ring off his finger and put it on my own. I seemed to put on with it a singular condition. It was as if two girls were waiting for me to come back to them. My troth had been pledged to one, and I felt in a measure bound—through my lost friend—to the other. But as it was not my habit to try to cross a bridge till I got to it, I settled nothing in my mind as to what I would do in the premises. Indeed, it appeared to me that Jim's plan for me and his sweetheart was but a fancy of his which had died with him.

The war lasted two years after Jim was killed and brought great changes. I was wounded at the battle of Winchester and sent to a hospital, where I remained some months. A number of young women in those days came down to devote themselves to nursing soldiers, and it so happened that I fell under the care of a young woman who ministered to me. I am quite sure that it was due to her attention that I recovered from my wound.

This being cared for by an attractive woman was a dangerous situation for a man to be placed in who had already two women to whom he might be said to be in a measure bound. I believe there are more marriages resulting from men being nursed by women during sickness than through any other cause. I am ashamed to confess that my betrothed and Jim's betrothed both faded before my growing attachment to my nurse.

Another weak spot in the situation for me was that, not having my natural physical strength, I did not have my full moral strength. I craved a demonstrative sympathy from my nurse and showed that I craved it. At first I got only an indulgent nurse's petting, but little by little the barriers were broken down between us, and we became lovers.

The day I was discharged from the hospital marked the close of my military service, for the war had ended. I was surely in an unenviable position. I was expected to go home and marry my fiancee. I felt that I should pay some attention to my dead friend's wishes, and I was in love with my nurse, who showed a willingness to listen to my suit. What should I do?

Providence was kind to me, for on rejoining my regiment for the purpose of being mustered out of service I found a letter from the girl to whom I had been engaged, but had not seen for four years. It was a long effort to excuse herself for breaking her engagement with me. She said that when we parted she was little more than a child, while now she was a woman. She had recently met a man who had been very kind to her and had the means to make her very comfortable. To refuse him would spoil his whole life. This was the gist of the matter, though it was spread out over sixteen pages of letter paper. It might have been condensed into six words, "You are thrown over for another."

I released her joyfully, though in a sorrowful letter, and an important point of my triangular complication was canceled. It remained for me to go to Jim's sweetheart and see what was in store for me there. I could not divest myself of the feeling that I would soon forgive myself if I did not do my part in bringing about what Jim had desired. I regarded it a matter of feeling rather than one of honor, but the feeling was very strong. I wondered if Jim had ever written her on the subject. If he had and it appeared that her future happiness as a wife depended on me I would not shrink from acceding to Jim's plan.

I tried to make up my mind to go to see the lady and abide by what the meeting brought forth, but in cowardice we always prefer to write rather than "take the bull by the horns." I wrote her a letter telling her of Jim's wish and leaving it with her as to what should be done in the matter. I received a kindly note in reply, couched in delicate terms, the main feature of which was that if I were fancy free she would be happy to see me, but if not the matter of Jim's wish need not even be taken up.

This reply helped matters amazingly. I wrote her that I loved another. In due time a reply came releasing me from any obligation to Jim, but inviting me to bring the ring for a friendly visit. She had a great desire to meet dear Jim's bosom friend.

I resolved to clear up this second point at once, then go and offer my heart and hand to the woman who had nursed me. I took a train the next day and on arriving at my destination drove to the house and sent up my card. Presently I heard a soft step on the staircase, and who should enter but—my nurse!

While I was paralyzed by astonishment, her face was covered with smiles and blushes. I stammered something about a remarkable coincidence, when she stopped me:

"The coincidence is not here. It was in our meeting in the hospital, you as patient, I as nurse. And I knew who you were the moment I saw the ring Jim had from me the day he marched away to the war."

"Did Jim write you"—

"He did."

"Then," I said, taking her in my arms, "since you have said that you will marry only the man who wears this ring I claim you."

For a brief space she was lost in thought. I fancied I could understand her reverie. She was thinking of the day, the moment, when she had spoken those words. What a difference between then and now! Those four years had broken the bonds uniting many a happy family. The man she had then agreed was among the many victims I had taken his place. Nevertheless we were both silent, thinking of the great change.

TROUBLED FOR YEARS WITH BRONCHITIS
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup GAVE INSTANT RELIEF

Bronchitis is a disease which is very prevalent during the late winter and early spring, when there are sudden atmospheric changes. It is a condition of inflammation of the bronchial tubes which produces mucous or phlegm. This irritates the throat and causes you to cough in order to get rid of it. The cough may be tight or loose according as to whether this mucous is sticky and hard to remove, or soft and easily expelled.

Bronchitis is not really dangerous but the complications which are liable to follow makes it necessary to get rid of it at the first sign. This you can do by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. A remedy that has been on the market for over 25 years.

John D. McFarlane, Jr., S.W. Margaree, N.S., writes: "I was troubled for years with bronchitis, and could not find any relief. I was especially bad on a damp day. I went to a druggist, and asked him for something to stop the constant tickling in my throat. He gave me a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which found gave me instant relief. It is best remedy for bronchitis I know of, and I now take care that I always have a bottle of it on hand."

See that you get "Dr. Wood's". Put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c; manufactured by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

QUEBEC MUST KEEP FAITH

Democracy Depends on Rule of Majority, Says Montreal Star.

MONTREAL, Dec. 18.—Commenting on the returns, the Star says: "The future course of this province, so far as the Military Service Act is concerned, must be very clear. Quebec, by its vote expressed at the polls, does not agree with the rest of the country on conscription, but Quebec, if it is to keep faith with the pledges of its chosen leaders, will adhere to the oldest principle of our system of government, the rule of the majority. And only through the observance of that principle can democracy survive."

Are Violently Opposing a Separate Peace With Russia and Denounce the Bolsheviki as Traitors to the Russian Revolution---Only Artillery Fighting is Reported From the French Front.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By Joseph Shaplen.)

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

STOCKHOLM, December 20.—Germany's Independent Socialists are once again up in arms against the Government. Confirmation of yesterday's despatches that Germany's real Socialists were violently opposing a separate peace with Russia came to-day in receipt of a current issue of the Leipsiger Zolks Zeitung, the chief organ of the Independent German Socialists. The leading editorial bitterly assails the separate peace movement as "the greatest danger yet menacing German and Europan democracy.' Demand is voiced that the Central Powers immediately state their terms, making general negotiations possible. The Bolsheviki are denounced in the editorial as "traitors to the Russian revolution." The editorial likewise reveals for the first time that the German Government has refused passports to Stockholm to members of the Independent Socialist party, the party of Ledebour and Haase. "This shows the soul of the German Government is just the same as ever," the editorial asserts. "It should open the eyes of the Russian fanatics who are now dealing with the majority Socialists, and the majority Socialists are the lackeys of the Government." Paul Axelrod, representative in Stockholm of the Workmen's and Soldiers' General Soviet, received advices to-day that the pan-Socialist Congress will appeal to the people of Russia for united action against the Bolsheviki "to save the nation from ruin by defending the constituent assembly."

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, December 20. — Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law told the house of Commons to-day he "could not state how many generals had been permanently retired in connection with the recent operations in France."

The declaration was made in reply to a query impelled because of the recent reports of a shake-up among the members of Field Marshal Haig's staff. London newspapers have been reporting sweeping changes, presumably due to the British failure to prevent gains by the recent German offensive out of Cambrai, which practically lost to the British all gains by General Byng's great drive.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS (Official), December 20.—There was moderate artillerying along the whole front last night, but no infantry actions.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Wednesday—According to press reports, Russia has been informed by the Central Powers that the latter intend to make peace proposals to the Allies.

This report is published in the Evening Post, which says the representatives of the Central Powers at the first preliminary peace conference with the Russians held yesterday, announced that their governments intended on principle, to put the question of peace before all powers and that they had asked their allies to do likewise. Russia was requested to take similar steps. It is stated the Russians are endeavouring by all means to sound the Allies.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, December 20.—A state of sieze has been proclaimed in Petrograd. Disorders in the capital due, it is said, to looting of wine cellars and shops, made necessary the proclamation of a state of siege. The Ukranian Rada and Bolsheviki government in Petrograd have been at odds since the successful revolution of the Maximalists early in November. The ultimatum referred to probably is the demand made by the Bolsheviki that the Rada permits troops to go through Ukraine to aid in putting down Kaledine's revolt.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Wednesday—The Rada, the governing body of the Ukranie, has sent a negative answer to the ultimatum of the Council of People's Commissaries. This means stiff resistance to the Bolsheviki government.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, Wednesday—Orenburg Cossacks, opposing the Bolsheviki, have occupied Tchelisbinsk, a junction on the Trans-Siberian railroad.

LONDON, December 20.—Portuguese troops near Laventie, north of Arras last night repulsed an attempted German raid, according to an official statement issued to-day from British headquarters in France and Belgium.

Margin Of Sea Losses Is Narrowing

Canadien Press Despatch:

LONDON, Dec. 20.—Speaking in the House of Commons to-day David Lloyd George, British Prime Minister, said that the margin of losses at sea was narrowing.

The sinkings by submarines, he declared, were decreasing, while shipbuilding was increasing.

The Premier said the sinking of submarines was increasing. Although merchant tonnage was down by twenty per cent, he added that the loss had been only six per cent. of imports over that of last year. Regarding the military situation Mr. Lloyd George said it was idle to pretend that hopes formed had been realized. This disappointment he attributed to the Russian collapse.

Practically all shipping has been requisitioned and building is speeding up.

No Confirmation Of Laurier Yarn

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

OTTAWA, Ont., Dec. 20. — The disposition of the members of the new House of Commons is occupying the attention of the political dopesters at the capital. There have been elected already 82 Conservative Unionists, 56 Liberal Unionists, and 91 Laurier Liberals, with four deferred elections and some seats doubtful. That Sir Wilfrid Laurier will continue to lead the 91 or such as are left of them after the soldiers' vote has been counted and tabulated, is fully believed here. The rumour which appears to have emanated from Montreal to the effect that he would be invited into the cabinet receives no confirmation in official circles here. Certain it is that no such invitation has yet been tendered. Though the question of French-Canadian representation in the cabinet is one which must engage the attention of the Government, Sir Wilfrid was once before requested to enter the Government and to help in the formation of a union. He declared he declined on the ground that he could not accept the policy of conscription which had been laid down as one of the chief planks of that proposed Union.

ANOTHER OF THE ORIGINAL SECONDS HOME FROM OVERSEAS

Pte. Wm. Cole, Who Left Peterborough in August, 1914, Returns From Active Service After An Absence of Three Years and Nearly Four Months

OTHER SOLDIERS HOME

Another one of Peterborough's quota to the original 2nd Battalion, returned home yesterday in the person of Pte. William Cole, who has been sent back for duty in Canada after three years and almost four months' absence from this city. Pte. Cole enlisted here with the 57th Regiment's company in the first few days of the war, leaving Peterborough in August, 1914, and went overseas as a member of A Company of the 2nd Battalion under Major George W. Bennett. He has been serving overseas ever since. Pte. Cole's wife and four children are at present in England, and he is anxious to get them back as soon as it can be arranged.

Another soldier who returned home yesterday was Pte. Fred Dunsford, formerly of the 93rd Battalion. He went to England with Lieu.-Colonel Johnston's battalion, and was transferred to another Canadian battalion at the Front.

Pte. W. Pound, of Norwood, an original member of the 21st Eastern Ontario Battalion, also reached home yesterday.

400 Labour Men In Next Election In Great Britain

"When the next general elections are held in Great Britain the Labour Party will put up 400 candidates. In Canada we had very few representatives in the elections, and there is not one Labour man returned to Parliament."

This was the only reference to the recent elections heard at last night's meeting of the Trades and Labour Council. There was no requiem over thwarted hopes, for the simple reason that the Labour Party in Canada has not yet arrayed its unionised ranks in solid support of candidates of its own choice.

The few exceptions afford reason for confidence that Labour is stirring within itself, and that eventually it will become the power which its numbers and its national service warrant.

WEATHER A FACTOR

If Italy's Line Can Hold For Another Fortnight the Winter Will Stop the Austro-Germans and Save the Venetian Plains

A TERRIFIC STRUGGLE

(By Henry Wood.)

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES IN ITALY, Dec. 20.—The fate of the Venetian Plains to-day hangs on the weather. If Italy's lines hold for a fortnight under the tremendous Teutonic pressure, winter's ice and snow will effectivsty lock the door to the Plains. Both sides realize the supreme necessity of a decision. If Italy can make a successful defence— as she is now doing — and check the Austro-Germans on their present line, she will be ready for a spring counter offensive. Officials regard the present situation as most favourable and most hopeful for the Italians since the original retreat.

THE ENEMY STRATEGY.

The Austro-German strategy is now sufficiently unfolded to render it certain their sole winter object consists in reaching the Venetian Plains through the Valley of the Brenta, flowing out from the Alps at Bassano. Protecting this crucial point, the Italians have two deep salients. One is east of the Brenta, culminating with its most northerly point in Mont Sorasic. Monte Grappa is its highest point. The other is west of the Brenta, culminating to the north in Monte Zaibena, of the Asiago Plateau.

While Gen. Below's German armies, by successive and carefully prepared attacks seek to encircle Monte Grappa by capturing the contiguous ground and neighbouring peaks, Gen. Conrad's Austrians are delivering either simultaneous or alternating attacks against the Asiago salient on the opposite side of the Brenta. During a four day continuous assault by the enemy last week, the Italian fourth army put up a resistance so formidable as to win unstinted admiration of both the French and British armies.

Snow fell throughout the mountain sector on Monday—the first real winter weather. At the most the enemy has only a few days left before great drifts of snow will freeze him up.

READY FOR EMERGENCY.

But even should the worst come to the worst and the Italian defence be wiped out, the Italian, French and British armies are always ready to meet any emergency. The terrific intensity of the battle now raging is aptly illustrated by the testimony of Austrian prisoners. They declare they are driven to the attack by a barrage fire by their own artillery, put behind attacking waves and constantly moving forward. Thus the Austrians must advance or be wiped out by their own guns.

Successful Air Raids By British Flyers

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Dec. 20. — British air squadrons raided German establishments in Belgium during the last two days, inflicting severe damage in many quarters, and setting shops at Bruges on fire with bombs. Seven German airplanes were destroyed and three were driven out of control. Three British machines are missing.

'After dark yesterday our airplanes bombed St. Denis, Westrem, Routers and Lichtervelde airdromes and Thorout, Ledeghem, Cambrai and Menin railway stations. All of our machines returned."

THE BRITISH CASUALTIES FOR THE WEEK

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, (Tuesday).—British casualties reported in the week ending to-day totalled 17,576 officers and men, as follows:

Officers killed or died of wounds, 231; men, 3,181.

Britain Is Facing A Serious Food Crisis

Scheme of Compulsory Rationing is Working Well in Some of the Big Northern Cities—Tea, Butter and Sugar Are Scarce.

LACK OF CONTROL

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The food question in Britain is rapidly approaching a crisis. The fourth winter of the war finds the public, rich and poor alike, driven to stand for long hours to secure daily necessities, such as tea, butter, margarine and sugar, of which the minutest portion is doled out to each customer regardless of the size of the family or actual needs.

This condition exists in nearly every large city of the country and it is worse in London, where the situation is so serious and public opinion has risen to such a pitch that prompt official action to relieve the situation has been promised and will soon be forthcoming.

Lack of Control.

This condition of affairs is not, as one paper suggests, "an inevitable symptom of the malady of dearth which has afflicted the earth." It is with the control, or rather lack of control, of the transportation and supply system that the fault lies. Of these two difficulties, the first is practically incurable —the shortage of petrol, the lack of transportation facilities and the fact that the railways of the country have a full task in the conveyance of troops and war materials — such impediments as these offer little hope of immediate solution. Accordingly, it is toward the question of supply that the Government's attention will be turned.

To-day the Food Controller declared that no stone will be left unturned in an endeavour to solve the question, the gravity of which is fully realized. "We have some of the finest brains in the country hard at work daily and hourly considering most carefully this problem in all its aspects," he declared.

Growing Discontent.

There is great and growing discontent among the housewives, especially those of the poorer classes, who feel that the well-to-do people are able to obtain supplies without inconvenience, whereas the poor are forced to wait hours in the cold to purchase almost infinitesimal amounts. This charge is unquestionably true in many instances, but to-day saw twenty or thirty long queues in different parts of the city, stretching sometimes for blocks, in which well-dressed and fur-coated women mingled with porters' wives and other neighbours to get their daily allowance.

The majority of shopkeepers sell only a certain allowance to each customer. The result is that these women, buying for a large family, are forced to stand sometimes almost all day in several different queues to obtain enough for the family dinner. Moreover, this is a daily performance, for in no case is it possible to purchase sufficient food to last any length of time.

Great Scarcity of Tea.

A quarter of a pound of tea is the most anyone is able to get, while butter, margarine and sugar are doled out in amounts of a quarter pound or two ounces. One woman told me to-day that she had only been able to buy one ounce of tea daily for the last week.

Bitter cold weather arrived yesterday, adding considerably to the suffering of those poor women who were obliged to stand in line outdoors. Two hours is the average wait in any London queue and those who arrive late have to wait from three to four hours or run the risk of not being supplied.

There is alleged to be a great deal of ruthless profiteering indulged in in this connection, probably one out

FOUR MONTHS HARD LABOUR FOR F. OAKES

GENERAL SESSIONS

Four months hard labour in the common jail was the sentence imposed this morning by His Honour Judge Huycke on Frederick Oakes, who was convicted of bigamy. The jury added a recommendation to mercy in their verdict. A charge of perjury against Oakes was dismissed.

At the resumption, this morning, of the December sittings of the County Court, Crown Attorney Hatton pressed for sentence in the case of Oakes. Mr. Gordon, representing the prisoner, pleaded for leniency upon the grounds that the accused was an only son and the sole support of a "very aged and frail mother." Mr. Gordon also pointed out that Oakes had been incarcerated in the gaol for several months awaiting trial and asked that this be taken into consideration.

Crown Attorney Hatton said that he would not press for a heavy sentence in view of the circumstances presented to the court. Mr. Hatton referred to the possibility of the prisoner continuing the relationship with his second wife if he were permitted to be at liberty. This the Crown Attorney did not approve of.

Addressing Oakes, Judge Huycke said that in imposing a light sentence he took into consideration two reasons, namely, the recommendation of the jury and the length of time that the prisoner has been incarcerated awaiting trial. He warned the prisoner that should he attempt to return to his second wife he would be brought before the Court and severely dealt with. He was at liberty to return to his first wife if such a course was possible. Judge Huycke said the prisoner had been skillfully and ably defended by Mr. Gordon.

WAS ACQUITTED.

Late last evening the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty in the case of A. E. Stevens, who was charged with obtaining money under false pretences. It was alleged that Stevens cashed a cheque for ten dollars at the Oak Hall Clothing Company's store on a Saturday and that the Manager, doubtful of the cheque, called up the Bank of Montreal, only to find that the accused did not have an account in the bank. The defence, which was conducted by Mr. G. N. Gordon, claimed that it was the intention of Stevens to open an account early Monday morning, which would have been deposited in time to meet the cheque had it been presented in the ordinary course. As it was the Manager of the Oak Hall did not wait for the Bank to open, but got in touch with the Bank authorities on Saturday afternoon, with the result that Stevens was arrested within an hour or two after the information was obtained from the Bank.

Mr. Gordon, in his address to the jury, made it plain that he did not approve of the lightning-like methods of the police in apprehending Stevens. He said that in the ordinary course of business the cheque would not have been presented at the bank until some time on Monday, when sufficient funds would have been deposited to meet the amount.

WOMAN FREED.

The Grand Jury brought in a "no bill" in the case of Mrs. Martha Althouse of Havelock, who was charged with setting fire to her house.

SECTION OF TIBIA USED TO REPLACE PART OF HUMERUS

WITH HARRY ROGERS

A veteran in his 19th year, Private R. Rickerd of Russell, Ont., who was wounded and taken prisoner at Zillebeke on June 2, 1916, is in the city for a few days, the guest of Mr. R. B. Rogers, with whose son, Capt. Harry Rogers, he was in the same hospital in Germany. The young soldier was in his 16th year when he enlisted with the 4th C.M.R. In the sharp engagement at Zillebeke he was shot through the upper part of his left arm. To replace part of the bone that was removed, a piece of his shin bone of the length required to close up the gap in his arm, was cut out and braced with steel splints and the severed humerus was successfully bridged. Operations in Germany and Switzerland have been entirely successful, and Private Rickerd stated that it was surprising to himself the strength that had developed in his patched-up arm. The tibia did not suffer any weakness by the removal of a strip of the bone. Private Rickerd was exhanged as unfit for service and spent many months in Switzerland, where he met Lieut. Fred Hobbs of Hastings. Capt. Rogers was on the high road to recovery when Private Rickerd left Germany, and he learned since that he is quite well again, restored to full strength and vigour. Harry, with his mouth-organ, was the life of the Hospital Ward, and he even pleased the German nurses and attendants by playing old classic German pieces.

Pte. Rickerd has been a convalescent home in Kingston.

Tonnage Will Be Used To The Best Advantage

Canadian Press Despatch:

PARIS, (Tuesday.) — Close co-operation in utilizing means of Maritime transport has been realized by the Allies, says an official note issued here to-day. It was announced previously that the Allies had decided to create an organization for co-ordination of Maritime activities, and to-day's statement says that the Council has been created, consisting of representatives of the United States, France, Great Britain and Italy. The Council will draw up schedules for division of tonnage, in accordance with the needs of each country for food supplies and war purposes. A Board will be erected in each country to decide on the utilization of tonnage placed at the disposal of that nation.

Star Pitcher Thinks He Ought to Have $10,000 From Philadelphia the Friendly.

CHICAGO, Dec. 20.— Grover Alexander, the star pitcher purchased by the Chicago Nationals from Philadelphia, stated that he thought $10,000 would be his fair share of the purchase price paid Philadelphia and he thought the latter club should pay it. "I'm not making any threats," said Alexander, "but I think the public should know the situation. Seven years ago Philadelphia paid $750 for me. They sold me for $50,000. Hard work brought about the boom in my stock and the man who did the work should get some of it."

A CALL TO EDUCATIONISTS.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier has often reclared that the "Twentieth Century belongs to Canada"; and Canada's material progress in the first five lustra of the cycle; her achievements in war, and her developments of patriotism and power of achievement in its prosperion are prominent promises of fulfilment.

The war and its responsibilities; the acting and thinking it has thrust upon us, have created a new spirit of regard of our duties and our opportunities; and a new sense of the necessity of getting out of ruts, in great many ways. The practical has largely replaced the theoretical, the new ideas have edged aside the conventional. Things and modes that have been regarded as good—good enough for a dormant and latent Canada, are no longer considered good enough for an awakened and aroused Canada.

In the press is reported the summary of an address, by Major Grant, son of the late Principal Grant of Queen's, on the occasion of his induction into the headship of Upper Canada College. In this he strikes the key-note of a notably desirable advance in educational methods and ideals. With the preface that he did not deprecate university training he spoke golden words of wisdom:

But I have a specially tender feeling towards the boy whose formal education ends in this school; for the boy, who, when he leaves this school must find his way through the forest unblazed."

Apply this to the Collegiate Institute, to the Public School, and we shall find in it the germ of vitally practical and important educational progress.

For the great majority of our public school pupils and to a lesser degree our Collegiate Institute, students, these are educational finalites, the be-all and the end-all of their formal education. They must face their life in the world with a public school or collegiate institute education as their sole mental equipment for the battle of life.

To the extent that their education is practical and fundamental, constituting a foundation for self-development in education, to that extent their success in life is helped.

To get the benefit of Principal Grant's idea, there must be a radical overhauling of our school curricula, to make them more practical and of the greatest help to the boy or girl whose "formal education," in the words of Major Grant, "ends in this school."

It seems possible that the necessary and desirable changes could be made without serious impairment of the more academic branches. But if this should interfere with the attainment of the greater good then selection for sacrifice should not be difficult.

Upper Canada College's traditions, founded upon an existence of nearly a century, are classical, but so important did Principal Grant regard his improvement in the way of educational practicality, that he declared that "if tradition must be broken to, then it needs must."

THE APEX OF IMPUDENCE.

The complacency, if not hypocrisy, with which the "Union" government journals refer to the Quebec situation is, to speak most mildly, remarkable. For instance, the Globe, in the course of an appeal under the heading, "Let Canada be United," says:

"Sir Wilfrid Laurier has often and eloquently maintained that Canadian unity was his cherished ideal. His opportunity is now. The verdict of his compatriots places him in undisputed leadership of his native province. The campaign of prejudice and passion, of bigotry and bitterness, waged for years against him and the things for which he stood, has spent its force. Declared Nationalism has no representation in the new Parliament. Lavergne and the four other apostles of Bourassa and his propaganda who faced the polls are defeated. Quebec was swept by straight supporters of the "Old Chief." Where he leads they will follow. It may be that Laurier's crowning accomplishment has been left till the close of his great career. He has pledged his word that he would accept the decision of the whole Canadian people on the question of compulsory military service. That decision has been given. If as Mr. Rowell pointed out, Quebec accepts it and loyally cooperates in carrying out the law—if the sons of Quebec go forth willingly, even at this late hour, to fight with the sons of the other provinces in the common cause—there will be developed such a spirit of fellowship and unity as will bind together races and provinces in the Dominion as they have never been bound together before."

The credit given Sir Wilfrid Laurier of having spent the whole of his political life in promoting racial harmony and national unity, is well deserved. But even in this post-election period, when controversial questions are logically deposed, it is not amiss to recall some of the reasons why Sir Wilfrid has not succeeded in promoting national harmony, and the reasons why his efforts have been neutralized, or the work he effected, undone.

It is not Sir Wilfrid Laurier that is responsible for the regrettable aloofness of Quebec, or for the fact that Quebec is lukewarm, and even hostile, to the call to Canada to do her share of war work. It is due to Sir Robert Borden and his party that the popular mind of Quebec has been poisoned; that her strong penchant and demonstrated preference for British connection has been overlaid with the heresy of abstinence from helping Britain in her wars.

It is the traitor doctrine of Nationalism, preached by Bourassa, not only without let or hindrance from the Borden government, but with its active and official approval, that has corrupted the Quebec people in regard to their imperial duties.

In 1910 Nationalism first sought representation in parliament, as a protest against Laurier's Imperialism—against his Act to build a Canadian unit of the Royal Navy. It was to "kill Laurier!" because he was too British. If at that time Mr. Borden had joined with the Liberals to destroy this incipient revolt in Quebec against British ideals, Nationalism would have been crushed in the bud. It never would have become the greatest evil of Canada, as it became under Mr. Borden's fostering protection.

Not satisfied with giving anti-British Nationalism a footing, in Drummond-Arthabaska, Mr. Borden and his party formed an alliance with it in 1911, had Bourassa, the arch traitor, speak for them, in an ultra-loyalist campaign. Mr. Borden helped with party funds the election of 27 Nationalists as his supporters, and he rewarded treason by taking into his cabinet three of Bourassa's disciples, and keeping them there till the day—last Monday—when Quebec to its credit rejected the traitor cabinet members at the polls.

With these facts in mind, it seems the apex of impudence to ask Sir Wilfrid Laurier to undo the work done by his political enemies with the central object of killing him politically, and with the result of splitting Canada asunder, alienating from the national sympathies a whole people, blocking Canada's work of putting her whole strength into winning the war.

And Sir Robert Borden and his party, or a large part of his party, are responsible for further antagonizing and alienating Quebec. Hear the Globe again:

"English-speaking Canada—and, perhaps, particularly Ontario—must likewise rise to the obligations of the patriotic purpose. Too often the ignoble and cruel words of prejudice and bigotry have been spoken to stir strife and set race against race. Too often sneers have been indulged in. There has been too much talk about 'slackers' and 'quitters.' The French Canadian deserves consideration and respect. The achievements of Talbot Papineau, Hercule Barre, Colonel Tremblay, of the 22nd Battalion, and others, bespeak his heroism. The victory of Courcelette attests his valour and fighting spirit. English-speaking Canada must remember that the inhabitants of Quebec have not the same, old-world ties as their Anglo-Saxon fellow-citizens, that they have not had the same opportunity of imbibing the spirit of the larger and nobler Imperialism, that they have lived in partial isolation, and have been the victims of dishonest and designing political agitators and demagogues."

"Designing political agitators and demagogues" have been let loose upon the innocent habitants of Quebec and permitted to corrupt them, by a government which, to get paltry political gain and support and, incidentally, "kill Laurier," fostered, harbored, encouraged and officially recognized organized treason. And yet and now the victim of the malice of his enemies, is asked to undo the evil his enemies have done both to him and to Canada, to Imperial interests, and to the interests of national harmony and Confederation solidarity.

At the same time if a word from Sir Wilfrid Laurier will undo the mischief done in Quebec, by the help of the unfaithful stewards of Canadian and Imperial interests, we believe he will speak it.

If the "Union" government should postpone sending reinforcements to the front by way of the Military Service Act till it has cleaned the Borden government's augean stables, the Greek Kalends would be here first.

The education is the best for Canada that, equips the mass of Canadians the best for the work of building up Canada.

Without the glorious mystery of the first Christmas, we should lay our dead to rest without hope.

Berlin Prints Pages About the Japanese

THE HAGUE, Dec. 20.—The question of Japan continues to monopolize the columns of the German press, especially Japan's interests versus those of America. At present it is difficult to say with what intention these articles were written, but it is possible that Germany is hoping for a rapprochement with Japan, and is preparing the people.

The Frankfurter Zeitung points out that Japan's refusal to send troops against Russia is comprehensible, as Japan will need friends in the future to further her interests if the European powers weaken themselves by a long war. However, she has little direct interest in lengthening the war, as she no longer is delivering war materials to Russia, and big masses are suffering from the war.

The paper argues that Japan is also menaced by a loss of American trade, because, as America becomes involved in war, the more nationally economical she is becoming owing to tonnage and questions of exchange, and she will soon be oblized to do without Japanese silk. It is argued also that if Japan continues to pursue her present policy, only two ways are open to her—either to become a vassal of the entente in opposition to her own interests, or to play the roll of a false ally refusing to share the work of the entente allies.

HOW A WESTERN NEWSPAPER VIEWS THE ELECTION RESULT

At the hour of writing it appears that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has not achieved victory, but will have a formidable Opposition following, larger than in the campaign of 1911, when the next Parliament—the thirteenth—is assembled.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier followed the clearly-marked trail of national duty, without swerving to the right or to the left, asking no man's support on selfish grounds, arousing a country from coast to coast, and facing almost single-handed, except for his partially organized army of followers, the most powerful forces ever brought to bear against a leader in any political campaign.

The opponents of the Liberal party alone can tell to what lengths the machinery at their command was used. The money must have mounted into millions, the voters prevented from exercising their franchise must have been many, and the "adopting" of the soldiers' vote remains to be presented as the final act in a drama that has been sordid and un-Canadian. The winning party may plume itself upon a victory in the name of conscription; it will never live down those things for which it must reproach itself.

The Unionist party wore two masks. One was the conscription mask, which has been take on and off, as the occasion demanded. To the farmers the Union Government appeared in no role of conscriptionist, but to the crowded cities which had given of their teeming thousands to the war, the mask of enforced service was used in an effort to stir the very emotions which its operators sought to quell in other sections of the community.

Then it wore the Liberal mask. The old government willingly damned itself as a weak, corrupt, inefficient regime, in the hope that its new role would be accepted with acclaim. "We are no longer Dr. Jekyll; can't you see that we are Mr. Hyde?" was made the issue. The Government and its host of ambitious followers were all things to all sections of the community. Win, win at any price, but win, was the word passed along, and all the branches of the service were responsive. The party men did their part, the converted newspapers fell in line, the soldier who opposed the Government was dragooned, the patriotic impulses of the women voters were capitalized into votes. Quebec, marked from the first to be a target Ontario, was used to arouse the people. The talk of "menaces" filled the air.

Union government finds the country in a more or less receptive mood, under circumstances when a true verdict could not be recorded. Sir Robert Borden has made his future and his fate. Let him face his problems! Are the statesmen of Great Britain not crying out to Canada for unity? Will the Borden policy of conscription produce the men reuired as reinforcements? The need is for men. The country is behind the Government in an adequate and determined war policy. When the shouting has died away union government will be faced with the most tremendous responsibility that ever came to a Canadian parliament. Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be found to strengthen the hand of the Government in every act calculated to win the war. He is a greater figure to-day than he has been at any time since he first entered the Canadian Parliament to serve the whole people.—London Advertiser.

OLD CLOTHES FOR NEW IN GERMANY

STRICT REGULATIONS REGARDING CLOTHING IN GERMANY.

BERNE, Switzerland. — To conserve the diminishing supply of clothing in Germany the German Government has imposed regulations requiring that, for all articles of linen or personal wear to be purchased, three similar worn articles must be returned. This increases the scope and rigor of the clothing cards introduced less than a year ago.

The regulation applies to cotton stockings, gloves, collars, table linen and cloth materials for various household purposes. For every suit or overcoat too well worn or one in good condition must be surrendered. The only articles of ordinary wear or use that are exempted from card regulation are wooden shoes and silk things.

More than a year ago there was much talk in Germany of reducing the consumption of cloth by interesting patriotic minded women to return to the old but fashionable tight skirt. The maximum quantity of material in meters, which should be used for a dress was very stipulated. The economy was not successfully accomplished however, for the German women, though they shortened their skirts appreciably, wore them wide and full.

Now therefore, there is pending a rigid specification limiting the number of yards of cloth which may be devoted to any garment of given proportions—depending upon the size of the prospective wearer. And if the wearer needs linen and other garments than outer clothes, she must turn in three corresponding, wornout pieces of lingerie.

The strict rules and regulations that are growing stricter each month have led naturally to an increased amount of deception and countless attempts by those who possess stocks of clothing to evade the card system by selling at abnormally high prices to those who cannot procure cards. The latest reports from Berlin tell of the arrest of a woman who was found to have concealed a stock of 1,000 dozen pairs of stockings. These she was peddling in little cafes and resorts of her discovery and at utterly disproportionate prices.

PRESS COMMENT ON THE ELECTIONS

Gouin is Silent.

Quebec, Dec. 18.—Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, who has many times said that the French-Canadians would accept conscription if the voice of the country so ordained, had nothing to say to-day as to the effect of the elections.

Calgary, Dec. 18.—The News-Telegram says: "The Government of Borden has sown to the wind, and the whirlwind is yet to come. But out of the national adversity that will temporarily follow the very menacing situation that has been created will come the national spirit that will e'er long sweep Canada from end to end."

Western French For Union.

Winnipeg, Dec. 18.—McMillan, the Liberal candidate, loses his deposit in South Winnipeg, Hon. "Bob" Rogers' old seat. R. L. Richardson, the Unionist, received a majority, even in St. Boniface, over his French returned soldier Liberal opponent. The French seat of Prince Albert, Sask., gave 250 majority to Knox, Unionist.

Invokes the "Bonne Entente."

Montreal, Dec. 18 — La Presse (Liberal) says: "Hon N. W. Rowell suggests that the future depends upon Quebec. It does not depend upon Quebec alone. Quebec is quite disposed, and always has been disposed to fulfill its national obligations. History proves that we are not cowards. Long ago this would have been demonstrated in the present war, if, at the outset, fanaticism towards the French-Canadians had been discarded in the general interest of Canada. Before the election campaign began the "bonne entente" was obtaining results in removing prejudices. Now that the election is over, this movement can be set in motion again."

"Big Business" Conspiracy.

Edmonton, Alta., Dec. 18. — The Bulletin (Hon. Frank Oliver's paper) says: "Big business has succeeded in its conspiracy to turn the war conditions to account and to secure control of the government power of the country for another Parliamentary term."

A little vinegar kept boiling on the stove while onions or cabbage are cooking will prevent the disagreeable odor from going through the house.

CRIMES OF A KULTURED KAISER.

The Kaiser's toys of flesh and blood
Are broken, bruised, destroyed.
The crimson tide is at its flood,
But the royal lust's not cloyed.

Dishonour leads dishonour on
Through Cavell's—Fryatt's shrieking blood,
To the Lusitania trap.

And all the way is strewn along,
With crucifixion's smear,
The mangled babes, the forced amour,
The monster's frothy leer.

As a thug strikes from the dark.
Fell here and there in the sea's repose,
On brigatine and bark.

Insidiously works his woe
By bomb and poison—Judas acts—
And the torch from hell below.

A partnership with God?
But the programme's incomplete,
The royal toys of flesh and blood
Must be maintained complete;

Dishonour no dishonour knows,
And Kaiser calls it pure,
When maidens, Kaiser-called, may breed,
That royal toys endure.

* * * *

Out in the dark, where ne'er the light
May pierce the black abyss,
Where the demons yell
From the depths of hell,
And the sibillant serpents hiss;

There may his hate return to hate—
His lust and venom consume,
As he hangs eternally desolate,
Chained e'er in the place of doom.

of every four standing in line buying to sell at a profit. I was present to-day when a woman who had fainted was discovered to have fifteen quarter pounds of sugar concealed about her person. She declared she had been standing in line since 5 a.m.

Compulsory Rationing.

Some of the big cities, such as Birmingham and Reading, have adopted compulsory rationing on their own hook, and it is working successfully. The Evening News strongly urges the adoption of the same system in London, having the Food Controller give notice to all retailers that they must register their regular customers and sell only to them.

This has been the worst week of the year for butter. No supplies have been received from Denmark or Ireland, and all the present restrictions on the use of cream in this country in order to increase the supply of butter, have not visibly improved the situation.

Of course when Britain increased blockade pressure on the Scandinavian countries a short while ago it cut its own throat so far as the matter of supplying the British people with sufficient butter and bacon is concerned. There is a shortage of these commodities, as well as of tea, sugar and margarine, but not a sufficient shortage to warrant the present queue hardship everywhere.

A Rationed Christmas.

This is going to be a rationed Christmas for most folks in Britain, owing to the extreme inefficiency of the meat distribution system now in force and to the high price of turkey. There are plenty of birds in the markets to-day, but many housewives already have set out on their Christmas shopping, and it will not belong before the supply is exhausted. Turkeys are going to sixty and seventy-five cents a pound in the larger markets, and before the holiday they probably will touch a dollar a pound

The Official Labour Gazette publishes figures yesterday showing that the rise in the principal items of food in the United Kingdom since the war began has been 103 per cent., an increase greater than in any other country of the world except Norway. Eggs took the greatest jump, costing now 239 per cent. more than before the war.

The average increase in France has been 83 per cent., but it is interesting to note that the daily bread supply there has been cut from three-quarters of a pound to about four-ninths of a pound, and that the wheat supply is less than half of that in 1913.

The Trades Council in this country are being urged to organize a national demonstration on January 19 to demand national control of all food supplies.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Mexican Wore Uniform of R. F. C. In Montreal City

MONTREAL, Dec. 20.—The son a former Mexican ambassador to Washington, who has been staying at one of the principal hotels in the city, and wearing the uniform of a British Royal Flying Corps, is now in the hands of the alien enemy department on St. Antoine street. He is going to be handed over to the immigration authorities for deportation on the ground that he entered Canada illegally, or else he will face a charge of wearing a British uniform without authority.

SPENT MONEY FREELY.

George Cassasus came to the city on November 24, and took an expensive set of rooms at the Ritz. He had a lot of luggage, much-monogrammed, and was a free spender. He said, and his statements have been found to be true, that he was the son of the late G. Casasus, former ambassador to Washington during the regime of President Roosevelt, that his father was a prominent banker, and solicitor, in Mexico City, who previously represented the Bank of Montreal in Mexico, and that he was the solicitor for the Union Pacific railroad there.

For nearly two weeks the young man had been living quietly in the hotel, but last Thursday he blossomed out into the uniform of an officer of the Royal Flying Corps and showed a preference for the company of returned officers with whom owing to his Flying Corps badge, he got on very friendly terms. Casasus, being a Graduate of Vale, and having spent three years in England, had a good education befitting his family's position, but his actions caused suspicion and Capt. Carter of the Alien Enemy Department, having the matter reported to him, quietly gathered him in. But he was allowed to return to his hotel again. In the meantime communication was had with the Flying Corps officers, and it was found that Casasus had no right to wear any such uniform and he was promptly gathered in again and held.

You so often hear a young lady remark, "I do not know what to get him for Christmas; there are so few things a man wants or requires." Thus the wife, the sister and the sweetheart is troubled about what would be most acceptable and pleasing. Colonel Grafton, head of the large Grafton establishment, has offered some very useful hints, just the things that every man wants.

A Pretty Silk Shirt

A handsome Percale or French Lawn Dress Shirt

An attractive pair of unlined kid Gloves

A rich and handsome Neck Tie

Half dozen Linen Handkerchiefs

Handsome Silk Muffler

An attractive Umbrella

Half dozen of his style of Collar

A pair of silk Braces

Silk Armlets

These are the things that a man likes. You can make no mistake. There is no difficulty in finding out the size of collar that he wears and that is all that is required. Your own good judgment will do the rest.

Grand Jury Condemns Unsightly Wooden Fence Adjoining Court House

History Repeats Itself in the Grand Jury's Report at the General Sessions Which Concluded This Morning—Public Institutions Visited

The general sessions of the peace for the County of Peterborough concluded this morning. The following report was submitted by the Grand Jury:

To His Honour Judge Huycke, Judge of the County of Peterborough.

We, the Grand Jurors, in attendance at the sittings of the General sessions of the peace for the County of Peterborough, beg leave to submit to your Honour the following report:

We thank your Honour for the lucid explanation of the responsible duties assigned to us.

We emphasize the reference in your address on this occasion to the flags in the Court Room, the one on the right, the Union Jack, the flag of the Empire of which we form a part, the one on the left, the Stars and Stripes, the flag of the United States, the great nation to the south of us. Both of these flags stand for liberty, freedom and justice, and back of the boys in the trenches to the last man and the last dollar until the enemy is defeated, and justice and freedom prevails, stand the citizens of these two great countries.

We deplore the calamity which has befallen the City of Halifax in the terrible loss of lives, and great destruction of property, which has evoked the sympathy of the entire civilized world.

The people of Canada are united as heretofore, to carry on the war, with men, money and resources.

In the course of our duties we inspected the following charitable institutions: Hospitals, Protestant Home, Isolation Hospital, Children's Shelter, St. Vincent Orphanage, House of Providence. We beg to report that these institutions are in excellent order, and provide comfortable homes for those under their care, who appear contented and happy.

The Isolation Hospital, we were unable to inspect. Miss Reid, the Superintendent, reported seven cases of scarlet fever and two cases of diphtheria.

Nicholls Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital were both visited by us and we are pleased to report that these hospitals are a credit to the city and provide a splendid service to the community at large.

We visited the Jail, which contains nine occupants, all of whom are men. One of the occupants should be removed to an asylum. The lower cells should have better ventilation. The kitchen requires a new cook stove, all of which we recommend.

We note with pleasure that the restoration of the Court House is being rapidly proceeded with and we have no doubt, when the building is again thrown open to the public, it will be found that the offices, the court room, and the general accommodation of the public will be suitable to the needs of the country and the City of Peterborough. We would, however, recommend that the unsightly wooden fence adjoining the Court House be removed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

R. HARSTONE, Foreman.

Philadelphia Public Ledger: It is not to minimise the tragedy of the loss of a United States destroyer in the European war zone, with attendant sacrifice of precious lives, to point out that such disasters are inevitable and to be expected and that the navy has been fortunate thus far to have paid no greater toll to the grim gods of war.

BREEZY LETTERS FROM GUNNER W. B. AITKEN

Warsaw Boy Says He Tried to Stop An Eight inch Shell But Instead Did An Aeroplane Stunt.

NOW IN HOSPITAL

The following are letters from Gunner William Aitken, 52nd Battery, to his mother, Mrs. W. B. Aitken, of Warsaw. Gunner Aitken, who lived in Peterborough for some time, has been in France for several months, and until the present time has escaped injury:

London, Nov. 12, 1917.

My Dearest Mother,

Here I am, large as life and twice as natural, and no limbs broken or missing. You will be surprised to see I am in England. I tried to stop an 8-inch shell, but it stopped about ten feet away and I did an aeroplane stunt, but landed right side up. That was on 16th October. I was a bit shaken up and went down the line next night and then caved in proper. I had visions of being carried on a stretcher, a dressing station, a train ride, and then a real bed for a while, and a nurse. I wasn't sure whether I was inthe wee brick house on the corner or up to my knees in Flanders mud.

I saw some funny things. I felt better on the 25th, and sent you a card. Since then I have beenigetting O.K., and my head is all clear now. I landed here last night—oh, this seems like real heaven. I can't realise I am in dear old Blighty. . . . Just had a wee rest. You see, my right leg and hand are out of commission. My hand is coming O.K., only the fingers are numb, no feeling at all. They called me the pin cushion, for the doctor used to stick pins in me, but I couldn't feel it. A pin would stand right up, but there was no feeling at all. Funny, isn't it? But I'm all Jake now. My chart says trench fever or something about some nerves as a result of shell concussion I only hope Viv. is still in England so he can come and see me.

Well, dear, my wing is getting shaky, so I'll stop for this time, and write more later.

Your wee son, Bill.

Address: No. 320867, W. B. Aitken,
Davidson Road War Hospital
Block C, Ward 18,
South Norwood.
S.S. 25, London, England.

Hospital, Nov. 19.

My Dearest Mother,

I am feeling pretty fair now, and am to get up to-morrow for a bit. The feeling is coming into my hand a little bit, but my fingers are as stiff as a board, just as if they were frozen, and white-looking.

But I am having a pretty Jake time. Yesterday was visiting day and I had a visitor. You remember my telling you about the little farmer girl. Well, she is off the farm now, and her home is in London; so I wrote her and she came yesterday and brought some apples and dandy grapes. Pretty good of her. I also have an invitation from her mother to come up for tea as soon as I am up; so I'll be all right.

Canadina Red Cross lady came, and I got such a nice little bag of things—a shaving kit, this writing paper, a hanky, hair brush, tooth brush, soap, etc. This seems to be a pretty nice hospital. Ladies come and take the fellows out to tea, and give free tickets for the theatre and for bun feeds. It looks pretty good to me.

How is every little thing in Warsaw? Anyone getting married or eloping? I was counting on seeing Viv. over here, but had a letter from Sheffield, and find he is in Belgium, and at it again. Hope I get as long a stay in Blighty as he did. It will be "tres bon."

Did I tell you that I met Bert Cooper, and he was going home on leave? We had a good old talk, and I gave him a German fuse nose to take to you. I picked it up about 800 yards from the front line. I have only a very few souvenirs, as I only got what was in my pockets.

I saw Clayton Selkirk's grave. It is in a wee cemetery of only twenty graves at Petit Vimy, on the far side of Vimy Ridge. I was over there one day, and was looking at these few crosses when I saw his name on one of them.

Well, mother dear, I think this will be all for this time. Write soon.

Your loving son, Bill.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

A special meeting for boys will be held at the Y.M.C.A. building on Sunday afternoon at 4.15 o'clock. The meeting will be in charge of Mr. Harold Copp and a programme appropriate to the Christmas season will be carried out. This is the first meeting of the season to which the younger boys have been invited, and, as the programme will be of special interest to them, every boy from ten to eighteen years of age is cordially invited to be present. The Y.M.C.A. building is now open each Sunday evening from eight to ten o'clock in response to the request of a large number of our senior members. It is the intention of the Association to conduct a programme each Sunday evening of special interest to the older fellows. Next Sunday evening, directly after the church services, Joseph Wearing, Esq., will deliver a most interesting address appropriate to the holidays. Every man and older boy is invited to attend.

The Y.M.C.A. building is now having an attendance of about five hundred per day. The dormitories have been filled with scarcely an over-night vacancy during 1917. 1200 games were bowled on the alleys and over 2500 games played on the senior billiard tables during November. No record is kept of the games played by the boys in their department, but, if the games of all kinds were taken into consideration, the number would aggregate considerably more than 5,000 for the month of November.

The problem before the Finance committee is the collection of $3,800.00 still outstanding in subscriptions. The committee hopes that the subscribers will further aid the Association by making their payments at the Association office, as it is very difficult for the Directors to make collections by means of personal calls.

The last regular meeting of the Board of Directors for the year was held on Tuesday evening, December 18th. Reports of the employed staff and committee chairman showed the activities of the Association and finances to be in a very satisfactory condition. The directors were pleased to note that the Bible classes and religious meetings of the Association have an aggregate weekly attendance of considerably over two hundred. The aggregate weekly attendance at all gymnasium classes is about three hundred and seventy-five, being probably the largest attendance at the gymnasium during the history of the local Association.

Hilliard, who went overseas last spring with the Royal Canadian Dragoons, had died in France on Tuesday, Dec. 11th, from head wounds received on November 10th. The bereaved family have the heartfelt sympathy of the whole community in their great sorrow.

A disastrous fire occurred here last night (Monday) when the large brick residence belonging to Mr. H. G. Fitzgerald, was burned, leaving nothing but the walls standing. The fire started in the attic and was discovered about eleven o'clock by Mrs. Fitzgerald, who was in the house alone and it had then made such headway that there was nothing to be done but get the contents out as quickly as possible. It was not long before a large number of friends gathered to give assistance and were successful in saving all the household effects. There being no wind the fire did not catch the outer buildings, though the stables and hen house were quite close to the house It is not known how the fire originated.

STRUCK MAN IN CHURCH WITH A NEW HYMNAL

Further Particulars of the Incident That Occurred in Rev. R. G. Peever's Church in London

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The most dramatic scene in the history of the First Methodist church occurred at the Sunday morning service, when Rev. R. G. Peever, for several months pastor of the church, attempted to persuade the members of his flock to vote for Union Government.

The sermon was over and as the last hymn ended Mr. Peever rose and assumed the role of dictator in political affairs.

Arthur T. Little, head of the firm of Robinson & Little, and for many years one of the church's strongest supporters, rose from his seat, grasped his overcoat and his hymn book and without any attempt to conceal his contempt for the proceedings stared for the door.

Slams Hisser With Hymnal.

As he neared the door he heard a hiss, and when he became aware of the source from which came the hiss Mr. Little's new Methodist Hymnal descended upon the head of E. C. Mitchell, a local drug manager and supporter of Major Hume Cronyn. No reply was forthcoming, and Mr. Little left the church.

Several others followed.

A chill fell upon the audience and at the front a man arose. He said that he had been supporting the Unionist side of the campaign, but he did not believe that politics should be discussed from the pulpit and that his sympathy for Unionism had been alienated by the remarks of Mr. Peever Mr. Peever made no reply.

The congregation has been stirred as never before and the near future will reveal whether or not the present minister will be long in charge of the pastorate. A number of the members have declared that they have left the church for good and all. Mr. Little's desire is that the action of a man who has been in the church only six months should not serve to create discord where there has been harmony for many years.

There was a dead silence in the church as the words came. The congregation was amazed. Then came a few rustles as of coats being seized and then many of the people gathered to worship saw Mr. Little stride up the aisle. He walked rapidly with his hymn book in one hand and his heel struck the floor hard. Then came the distinct "his-s-s-s-s," something new in a church

Mr. Little saw from whence it came. He would not be hissed at by anyone. And the new Methodist hymnal was put a new use that must have stirred the shade of Oliver Cromwell into a glow of satisfaction. It landed with a smack that was heard across the edifice. Mr. Little hesitated a moment, but the other man did not get up or make a move to resent the blow.

Then came the statement from the Unionist that he could not approve the use to which the temple was turned. Other people left the church and the furore was over without any further statement from the pulpit. Facial expression told a good deal, and the congregation was in a serious mood.

Disgusting in the Extreme.

"I could stand for neither the clerical interference, which came at a time when the feelings of the congregation was very deeply stirred, and which was appealed to me, who have kept out of the campaign, as disgusting in the extreme, nor could I stand for a hiss at my just portest," said Mr. Little. "For the sake of unity, I wish to do what I can to preserve good feeling in the congregation, and I trust that the action of a man who has been with us for six months, and who apparently, thinks our intellectual needs are greater than our spiritual needs, will not jar our harmony. I did what was right, and I stand by what I did."

"No man has the right to shield himself behind the pulpit, and tell people how they shall or shall not vote," said W. N. Manning, one of the prominent members of the First Methodist Church, and superintendent of the Sunday school, who left also before the congregation was dismissed. "Bishop Fallon was a man who said what he had to say through a letter to the newspapers, where he could be answered and his arguments met. Our minster did not do that, but took advantage of a church service to tell us what to do. Politics should be divorced from the church. Our ministers are making an awful mistake in interfering with politics. I regret exceedingly that Mr. Peever should have done this."

The statement was given widespread circulation that someone had placed a sign upon the church, reading, "How Much Did Flavelle Give to This Church?" but inquiry was met with the answer that such a sign had not been seen by anyone connected with the church.—London Advertiser.

Backed Into River Engineer Drowned

Sarnia, December 19. — Pere Marquette Engineer McIntosh was drowned and Fireman Henning had a narrow escape from a similar fate, when a Pere Marquette engine which was backing up on the south approach of the Black River railway bridge, dropped over into the river. Both members of the engine crew jumped and Fireman Henning was rescued by the bridge tender, but McIntosh was drowned. His body has since been recovered. The engine and tender are submerged, and the services of a lighter will be required to remove them. The accident happened just as the bridge was being opened for the ferry Conger to come to Sarnia.

THE BOARD OF WORKS WILL HAVE AN OVERDRAFT

The Debit Balance Will Be Between Eight Hundred and a Thousand Iron Men—Olive Avenue Residents Have a Street For Adoption.

One department of the civic administration that faces the prospect of an overdraft is that of the Board of Works. At a meeting of the Board of Works Committee held last evening it was reported that the expenditures up to end of November were $21,957.81. It will take another eight hundred dollars to complete the year's work, and the estimated overdraft will be between eight hundred and one thousand dollars. The flooring of Hunter Street is one of a number of items that is responsible for this overdraft. At first it was intended to charge this work against the debenture debt, but this was not possible, and the money had to be taken out of the appropriation.

Assessment Confirmed.

Miss Griffith, corner Antrim and Aylmer Streets, applied for a refund of taxes on what is known in municipal parlance as "flankage." It appears that the Court of Revision has confirmed the assessment on this property, and the owner will be notified accordingly.

Residents on Olive Avenue are still anxious to have the city take over this street and deal with it as a public thoroughfare. At present it is private property, and the city will not assume any responsibility in connection with the matter until City Solicitor Gordon has looked into the legal aspects of the case. The residents on the street are anxious to have the street repaired.

Helping Out The Supply Of Fuel

Alderman Duncan's Proposal to Utilize Dead Street Trees and Useless and Unused Wire Poles

In this terrible time of fuel scarcity, we are inclined to catch at any straw, so to speak.

Alderman Duncan proposes something that he thinks, and probably will, if carried out, help a little—and every little helps.

He suggests that if the dead street trees—and there are a good many of them—were cut down and converted into fuel, there would result a good many cords of good wood. And there are a good many useless wire poles in different parts of the city, untised or useless by decay at the ground that might also be converted into fuel.

It is worth while, perhaps, to have a careful survey made of our street trees, and any tree whose life is done marked. It could be soon ascertained how many trees are cumbering the ground that might be converted into much-needed fuel.

But the work must be carefully done and under competent oversight. Much as we need fuel, we cannot afford to sacrifice a single sound, living tree, except in places where they are growing too closely and can be judiciously thinned, with advantage to the remaining growth.

PRESENTATION TO MANVERS' REEVE

COBOURG, Dec. 19.—At the conclusion of the December session of the Counties Council of Durham and Northumberland, Warden James R. Armstrong, Reeve of Manvers, was presented with a handsome gold watch, chain, and locket by the members of the Council.

PETERBOROUGH WILL BE GROUPED WITH LINDSAY

PORT HOPE, Dec. 19.—The representatives of Groups 2 and 3 of the junior series of the O.H.A. met here this afternoon. In the first group were three teams, Lindsay, Peterborough, and Port Hope, and the other group was composed of Picton, Cobourg, Oshawa, and Whitby.

The latter three teams objected to the big jump to Picton, and favoured Port Hope in Picton's place.

The local club was quite anxious that this change should be made, and after some discussion all the representatives agreed to it."

Lindsay and Peterborough Juniors will probably play a double schedule, while Picton will apply to the O.H.A. to be placed in some other district. The following schedule was arranged:

Jan. 1—Port Hope at Cobourg.
Jan. 3—Oshawa at Whitby.
Jan. 7—Whitby at Port Hope.
Jan. 9—Cobourg at Oshawa.
Jan. 14—Oshawa at Cobourg.
Jan. 15—Port Hope at Whitby.
Jan. 21—Cobourg at Port Hope.
Jan. 21—Whitby at Oshawa.
Jan. 25—Port Hope at Oshawa.
Jan. 25—Whitby at Cobourg.
Jan. 29—Cobourg at Whitby.
Jan. 30—Oshawa at Port Hope.

Mayoralty Candidates Before Trades And Labour Council

Discuss Municipal Affairs

Peterborough's mayoralty candidates, Alderman Duncan and Alderman Stratton, addressed the Trades and Labour Council last night in their first encounter of the municipal campaign. Both were cordially welcomed and at the close received a vote of thanks for the information they imparted regarding the city's finances and its present and future problems. Alderman Stratton, speaking first, stated this year's operations would show a small balance in the city's favour.

As chairman of the Finance Committee during the past three years, he had done all in his power to keep the taxes at the lowest rate possible in keeping with good government and progress. "We have looked after the finances to see that the ratepayers' money was properly spent, and that they got full value for every dollar they paid into the treasury."

Quoting from a financial statement, Alderman Stratton pointed out that in 1914 the tax rate was 26 mills, and in 1917 was 26.30 mills, plus the garbage rate and war tax for a total of 28 mills. The assessment last year showed a decrease of $129,185.00, caused by the Street Railway and Seymour Power plant being absorbed by the Hydro-Electric Commission. The assessment grew from $9,172,700 to $11,564,330, the increase of $2,391,540 being 26 per cent. The total debenture debt is $2,521,128.72, and of this sum only $4,204.25 will mature at the end of this year.

Alderman Stratton emphasized the need of making every effort possible to secure new manufacturies. He mentioned some of Peterborough's splendid advantages that should attract both industries and their employees. In view of the obligations facing the city he said the people should return a council that will keep down the taxes.

A member asked Alderman Stratton why the Water Works showed no profits. He remarked that the city might as well "soak the public" as the profiteers, and the revenue could be used to meet municipal expenditure.

Chairman Hartley explained that the consumers of water and light participated in these utilities at cost.

"How about the city going into other businesses, fuel for example," a member asked.

Alderman Stratton—I Don't believe the city should go into the retail business. To compete with the merchants would be folly.

Another asked—Are you in favour of jaunts around the country every week?

Alderman Stratton — Not unless they are in the interest of the city.

Q.—Do you approve of $14,000 being spent in the Police Department?

Alderman Stratton—No. Peterborough should have no more men than it needs. This should be looked into by the Police Commissioners.

Alderman Duncan.

"There is not much left for me to deal with," Alderman Duncan said. "Conditions are such this year that we must have a man at the head of the Council who will use good judgment in economy." He referred to the probability of the city being forced to build the sewage disposal plant. This will cost $150,000. The Hunter and London street bridges have to be under way during the next two years.

"We must get down to business and leave until after the war whatever work is not absolutely necessary. I know as chairman of the Board of Health that the townships have been pressing us to build the outfall sewer, but I don't think the Provincial Board will demand it in view of conditions prevailing at this time.

Both Aldermen Duncan and Stratton stated when asked where they stood on the ward system of elections that they had supported the by-law in the Council for the reason that they felt the people should have an opportunity of voting on this by-law as requested by the Labour Council. They could thereby declare whether they wanted to retain the ward system or return to the general voting.

Alderman Duncan stated that the city had been promised street railway extensions, and also the expenditure by the Hydro Commission of $10,000 in improving the gas plant.

Both utilities would soon be owned by the city. The gas works had not been paying a profit but the Street Railway had shown very favourable returns in recent years.

Both candidates avowed their support of public ownership. They ran the gauntlet of many suestions touching upon the city's affairs.

MORE MEN ARE NEEDED AT THE FRONT

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Dec. 20.—In referring to Italian reverses Premier Lloyd George said to-day it would be necessary for Great Britain to make greater sacrifices to strengthen its armies in the coming year. Need would arise to increase the nation's man power at the front by taking some men now exempted. The Premier's speech was delivered when the adjournment for the holidays was moved in the House of Commons this afternoon.

He dealt first with the problem of food. Owing to the efforts of the Food Controller an improvement was visible in the circumstances which caused so much anxiety in the last few days.

The Premier said that if the Russian army had fulfilled expectations of its generals, by this time German military power would have been completely humbled. On the whole Premier Lloyd George said, the British campaign had not achieved the expectations formed, but he declared there had been military successes in Palestine which would have a permanent effect on the history of the world. Jerusalem, he stated, never would be returned to the Turks.

The Premier said that the losses in shipping had been lighter by 100,000 tons more than he had anticipated in his August estimate.

Ingersoll Radiolites

Watches that show time only in the light are part-time watches. They're useless in a dark room; useless after bed-time; useless in the early morning; useless wherever it's dark. And often there's no convenient light.

Ingersoll Radiolites are useful in the light and in the dark. They are real luminous dial watches—need never be exposed to the light.

For the hands and figures contain real radium! That keeps them glowing in the dark as brightly as ever for twelve years or more.

Only Ingersolls are Radiolites.

Note the name—RADIOLITE. Remember that it is exclusively an Ingersoll product.

You can tell a genuine Radiolite by the name INGERSOLL on the dial.

There's an Ingersoll for everyone—sixteen different models now assembled in a Canadian factory: Radiolite models, plain dial models, jeweled models and special models, $1.50 to $7.50.

AWAIT THE WINTER WITH SERIOUS FEAR.

Stockholm, December. 19. — The Berlin Tageblatt, severely criticising the war provision office, says: "City dwellers await the coming winter with anxious concern and serious fear. The foodstuff prospects are more unfavorable than at any time during the war. To the high cost of necessaries which already has become a terrible burden to the masses is added the danger that not even the most absolutely necessary foodstuffs can be considered as being assured."

Hound Hit By Street Car Was Still Going To-day

A hound belonging to Mr. C. Shambo, Rubidge Street, exhibited many of the signs of rabies this morning in a rampage at the intersection of Rubidge Street and Park Street. It chased several persons, according to reports, and put to flight dogs that had escaped like itself from both muzzle and leash.

Finally Detective Meagher was sent to the south end to investigate the reports received by the police, and was informed that the hound had been hit by a street car, and was not suffering from an inoculation of rabies or that equally frenzied bacilli that affect partisans in the heat that is stirred up for them at election time.

TAXI DRIVERS MUST GIVE INFORMATION ABOUT PASSENGERS

Under a by-law of the Police Commissioners, which has been rarely invoked by Chief Thompson, Wm. Eastland, a taxi chauffeur, was fined $10 this morning for failing to give proper information to the police regarding the destination of four passengers he carried last Saturday night. Sergt. Reid and P. C. Blade, witness for the prosecution, stated that two men and two women piled into the car after coming out of a cafe. It was learned that the two men were drunk The defendant told Sergt. Reid he had taken his fares to the south end, but otherwise gave a vague and unsatisfactory account of where he parted from the questionable quartette.

Canada's Trade Is Increasing

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Dec. 20.—A big increase in trade is reported by the Department of Customs to-day. During November the total export and import trade was 268 millions, which was 82 millions more than the same month last year. The trade reports for the year to-day also show increases all round.

Special Trains For Returned Men

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—The Associated Press to-day carried the following: An Atlantic Port.— Special trains left here to-day for Canada carrying 1,200 invalided Canadian soldiers who arrived here yesterday on a British ship. With military precision they were transferred from the vessel to the railroad depot, and their only complaint was that they were not permitted to visit the city here.

WOULD CLOSE CLUBS TO CONSERVE COAL

UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATOR APPEALS TO GOLFERS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Golf and country clubs throughout the United States have been requested by H. A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator, to close their club houses during the winter months in order to conserve coal. Howard W. Perrin, President of the United Stats Golf Associatin to-day made public a letter received from Mr. Garfield with the suggestion that copies of it had been forwarded to the members clubs of the association.

"The coal situation is, as you know, vry serious from the point of view of the comestic consumer as well as for industries working on munitions and other war necessities," Mr. Garfield's letter read in part: "It has been brought to my attention that a large number of golf and country clubs keep their clubhouses open through the winter, and an estimate, made to be sure from partial data, indicates that the amount of coal which will be burned by these clubs during the months of December, January, February and March will total for the United States at least 100,000 tons.

GOVERNMENT FIXES PRICES FOR SALMON

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Rumours that the Food Administration would shortly fix prices at which canned salmon was to be sold to the public or at least to jobbers, have been current in the wholesale district for the past few days and the trade has been in a state of expectancy looking for something to develop in that direction.

Some weeks ago the Food Administration issued a circular to canners fixing the price the Government would pay for its own allotment of salmon on the basis of $1.75 red Alaska and $1.50 for pink. This announcement caused consternation in the trade, for the then prevailing prices for commercial transactions were about $2.75 for red and $2 for pink. Since then prices have ranged from $2.50 to $2.85 for red, and $1.75 to $1.90 for pink, and the trade has been unable to reconcile the wide difference between what the Government was to pay and what the trade had to pay, especially as the Government had made a scientific investigation as to costs and had allowed a reasonable profit.

The question that has been asked ever since has been why should not the public be allawed the benefit of such investigation and why should the public be allowed the benefit of much in excess of what has been found to be a reasonable profit? There has been no answer as yet to this question and apparently there is not going to be one immediately, for the Food Administration apparently has come out on the side of the packers and will allow them to charge the public a much greater profit than is considered reasonable from its own standpoint.

FARMERS WILL NOT PRODUCE ON MERE PATRIOTIC GROUNDS

Tillers of the Soil Must Be Promised a Fair Profit on Their Production, United Farmers of Ontario Are Told At Convention

WON'T BE CARRIED AWAY BY NEWSPAPERS

TORONTO, Dec. 20.—"No farmer will produce on mere patriotism. We cannot live on patriotism. We should have enough to cover the cost of production and a little interest on our investment."

This was the message of A. W. Amos to the 450 Ontario farmers at the annual convention of the United Farmers of Ontario yesterday. "The powers that be should demonstrate to us that they are going to make proper use of what we produce," he continued. "We must have the elimination of waste and to some extent the assurance of a proper price and due profit. The producer must be protected, not by tariff walls such as guard manufacturers, but by a profit on his produce commensurate with its costs.

"But our kinsmen are at the Front fighting for us. Let us fight famine for them. We must not mind what the other fellows are doing. Let us watch them as much as we can and criticise if we will. But let us stick to it, whatever his actions, and do our utmost.

Can't Secure Workers.

"As to the labour side of this question, we haven't got any labour, and there seems to be no chance of getting any. And it is not as easily solved as city people may think. With what degree of safety can an inexperienced man go out with a team of horses and till the soil? We must have competent help or else our task becomes a hazardous one.

"Farming is not an exact science. We farmers cannot be purely mechanical. I challenge any man here who has had a setting hen suddenly go on strike to make her hatch one, chicken. We must often take things as we find them."

The speaker struck forcefully at the waste of grain used in the manufacture of beer. Last year, he said, 71,956,049 pounds of malt had been used in the making of 34,000,000 gallons of beer. This meant a wastage of 96,000,000 pounds of barley. To the extent of 10 or even 25 per cent, barley could be used in the making of bread, so that 19,000,000 pounds of this barley might be used in making supply of bread will take 36,000,000 bushels of wheat. "Not one bushel of the vast amount used in the manufacture of beer should continue to be used so," he declared.

In Unsatisfactory Position.

"We have not been paying for this war as we go along," said Mr. W. L. Smith, of Durham County. "We have been borrowing money and spending it in this country. As a result we are enjoying a fictitious prosperity. Some day all this money will have to be paid back, and unless the farmers are organised they and their sons will bear the chief burden of it and others will escape.

"The farmers of to-day find themselves in a very unsatisfactory position. They are more numerous than the trading, manufacturing, and the transportation classes, and yet they have far less influence. It used to be considered whether the farmers of this Province would approve of any agricultural legislation under consideration, but nowadays no one stops to see or think what the farmers will say. This is due to the decrease of rural and increase of urban populations; to organisation on one side, and lack of organisation on the other; and more than anything else to lack of education among the farmers of Ontario.

"I am not reflecting on the ability of the farmers, for there is greater capacity for clear thinking along the concession lines than in the streets of the city.

"The remedy is to be found 'right here' in bodies affiliated with the United Farmers of Ontario Association. But what is still more needed is local organisations where the issues of the day can be discussed. This was to be found in the junior farmers' movement."

Avoid as you would a pestilence allowing any departmental official to guide your organisation.

Attacks Toronto Papers.

Messrs. Burnsley, of Jefferson, and Doherty, of Peel, would not let these comments pass without rising to defend the press. "My experience with the press has been that they have a desire to be fair and honestly express the viewpoint of the farmers in this Province," said the latter.

Tells of Year's Work.

Mr. J. J. Morrison, secretary-treasurer, outlined some of the things the association had accomplished recently. A free interchange had been arranged between the Bell Telephone Company and rural telephone lines which was of immense value to the farming communities all over the Province. When the railways proposed raising freight rates $40,000,000 a year the United Farmers had put up a fight and won. When the grain commission met to set a price on farm products the United Farmers fought hard, but they were not strong enough. "They set a price on what we sell, but not on what we buy," said the secretary.

The secretary reported that at the time of the last convention there were 200 local branches, as compared to 315 this year, and 8,000 members as compared with 12,000 now. "And yet there are 250,000 farmers in Ontario; we have only one-twentieth with us as yet," he said.

The auditor's report showed a surplus of $2,000.

By ARNOLD FREDERICAS

It appeared to have crept to the door, and from it came a low, quite human whimpering, as though it were in great grief. Perhaps, Grace thought, this was caused by the absence of the two women. She lay quite still, trying vainly to free her hands from their encircling bands, praying silently that Richard would come to her assistance. Her nerves were badly shaken. She contemplated hours, even days of such a situation with terror. At least, however, the coming of the dawn would bring one relief. She would be able to see what this uncanny thing was that shared her captivity.

Suddenly she became aware that someone was ascending the stairs in the hall outside. Could it be Richard coming to her assistance? She strained her ears, fearing that it might be only one of the tenants of the apartment above, returning home at a late hour.

The creature at the door had apparently also heard the approaching sound, for its whimperings ceased. Grace could tell by its movements that it had risen. There was a faint sound of fingers sliding over the polished surface of the door. The steps outside came to a halt.

With all her force Grace tried to cry out, but the gag prevented her from uttering a sound. Then there came a sharp knocking at the door.

The figure before it seemed to be fumbling noiselessly with the catch. In a moment Grace felt, rather than saw, that the door had been opened. Another interval of silence came, and then the person outside flung himself heavily forward.

The silence of the room was broken by a tall, a succession of unearthly screams. Grace saw a dark body go hurtling through the air, and then came the sharp, vicious crack of a pistol. The next thing she saw was her husband, bending over her, flashing an electric torch in her face. With frightened eyes she looked up at him and tried to smile.

The first thing that Duvall did, after releasing Grace from her bonds, was to take her in her arms and kiss her. Then he found the electric switch upon the wall and turned on the lights.

"What—what was it?" Grace asked, staring before her in horror.

"What was what?" he questioned.

"That—that thing that was locked in here with me."

"Poor creature. A monkey. I'm sorry I had to shoot it." He pointed to a crumpled figure on the floor dressed in a gay costume of red silk.

"But—what was a monkey doing here?"

"I'll explain all that later. Where is the woman?"

He glanced toward the silent bedroom.

"They have gone?"

"Yes. There were two."

"Ah! The Ford girl. I might have known. Where did they go?"

"I—I don't know. To the station, I think. They said something about waiting there for a train."

"What station?"

"They didn't say. But they spoke of taking a car to 42nd Street, and crossing over. It must have been the Grand Central."

"Or possibly the West Shore. We will have to try both. Are you able to leave now?"

Grace straightened out her stiffened limbs.

"Yes—I guess so."

"Then come along."

As they started to leave the place two men confronted them at the door. One was Mr. Scully, he of the ground floor apartment, the other a short, thickset man who at once announced himself as the janitor of the building.

"What's going on up here?" he questioned. "I heard a shot."

"I had to shoot it, though I am sorry now that I did. It attacked me in the dark. I couldn't afford to take any chances. My wife was locked in here, and was, so far as I knew, in grave danger."

"Your wife?" The man glanced at Grace.

"Yes."

"But—where is Miss Norman. And how did that monkey get in here?"

"What for?"

"I imagine she did't want to leave it at her rooms. She did not expect to return there."

"And Miss Norman's gone, you say?"

"Yes."

"Where to?"

"They have gone?"

"Yes. There were two."

"Ah! The Ford girl. I might have known. Where did they go?"

"I—I don't know. To the station, I think. They said something about waiting there for a train."

"What station?"

"They didn't say. But they spoke of taking a car to 42nd Street, and crossing over. It must have been the Grand Central."

"But—where is Miss Norman. And how did that monkey get in here?"

"What for?"

"I imagine she did't want to leave it at her rooms. She did not expect to return there."

"And Miss Norman's gone, you say?"

"Yes."

"Where to?"

—"there's no knowing what might have happened. Tell the chauffeur to drive to the Grand Central Station."

It was three o'clock when the cab drew up at the curb. In spite of the lateness of the hour, there were a good many persons moving in and out of the station. Duvall got out and motioned to Grace and Leary to do the same.

"We will all go in by different doors," he explained, "and meet in the general waiting room. If the women are not there, Mrs. Duvall will look through the women's room. If you see them, and they make no effort to escape, wait for me to join you. If they do try to get away, detain them until I come."

It was Duvall himself, however, who first caught sight of the objects of their pursuit. They sat, both apparently asleep, on a bench in one corner of the main waiting room. The detective was not certain of their identity, heavily veiled as they were, until he had gone quite close up to them. Then he saw that they were Miss Ford and the woman who had escaped from him while in the cab the night before.

He leaned over and tapped the Ford girl on the shoulder.

"Wake up, Miss Ford," he exclaimed.

The girl shivered, then struggled to her feet. Her companion appeared to be too dazed to move although she opened her eyes and stared at him with a vague and terrified face.

"Will you come with me quietly," he said, "or shall I call a policeman and have you put under arrest for the attack upon my wife?" He addressed himself more particularly to the woman who was sitting.

She now rose and made a movement as though to attempt to escape. Duvall grasped her by the arm.

"It will be quite useless to attempt it, Miss Norman," he said. "I have help close at hand in case it is needed." He glanced toward Grace and Leary, who were now approaching. "I do not wish to use any violence, of course, but you and your friend are going back to the apartment on Ninety-sixth Street with me."

His voice, his manner, made it apparent to the two women that escape was hopeless. They seemed suddenly to realise it, to give up further ideas of resistance.

"Very well," Miss Norman said, "we will go."

"Good." Duvall turned to Leary. "Take those two suit cases, Leary, and get another cab." In silence the little party made its way to the street.

The two women said nothing on the way back to the apartment, and Duvall did not question them. There was time enough for that, he reflected, after they had reached their destination. Within less than an hour from the time of their departure their entire party was back in the woman's apartment.

The janitor was still there on guard but the body of the dead monkey had been removed. Duvall requesting Leary to remain, closed the door. The janitor rose and came toward them.

"Look here, Miss Norman," he began, "who's going to pay for that broken lamp and them vases, and ornaments?"

The woman regarded him with a stare, but said nothing.

"Never mind about those things now," Duvall said. "They can remain. I have some questions of much greater importance to ask these ladies. You need not wait. In fact I should prefer that you did not. The matter is a private one."

The janitor took his departure, grumbling to himself, and Duvall closed and bolted the door. Then he requested the two women to be seated. They obeyed without a word.

"Why did you send those threatening messages to Miss Morton?" he suddenly asked, addressing himself to Miss Norman.

She faced him defiantly.

"I'll answer no questions," she flung at him. "You can't prove that I sent anybody any messages."

"Do you deny it, then?"

"Yes!"

Duvall turned to Grace.

"You saw this woman enter Miss Morton's hotel to-night and go up in the elevator, did you not?"

"Certainly!"

"Do you deny that?" The detective once more addressed Miss Norman.

"No. What of it? How do you know I went to Miss Morton's room?" Her defiance was in no way lessened. Duvall saw that she meant deny her guilt utterly. He turned to Leary.

"This woman came to you, did she not, with a request that you spy on my wife's movements, and inform her concerning them?"

The chauffeur nodded.

"Yes, sir. She did."

Again Miss Norman spoke.

"Suppose I did. What then?"

"You will admit, I presume, that you fainted at the theatre the other night when the picture of the death's head seal was thrown on the screen and that later you escaped from the cab in which I had placed you."

"Certainly I will admit it. The hideous thing startled me. As for escaping from the cab, I had every reason to do so. You not only attempted to drug me, but after that you tried to steal the contents of my purse. You are the one who ought to be arrested, not I."

The woman's attitude began to annoy Duvall especially as, so far, he realised fully that the evidence against her was entirely circumstantial and vague. He turned away and began to search the rooms.

AWFUL ATTACKS OF HEART TROUBLE

EASED BY SECOND DOSE OF

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills

One of the first danger signals announcing something wrong with the heart is the irregular beat or violent throb. Often there is only a fluttering sensation, or an "all-gone" sinking feeling, or, again you may experience a smothering sensation, gasp for breath and feel as though about to die.

In such cases the action of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills in quieting the heart, restoring its normal beat and imparting tone to the nerve centres, is, beyond question, marvellous.

Mrs. Frank Arseneau, Newcastle, N.B., writes: "I have awful attacks of heart trouble for the past five or six years, and as I had tried many kinds of medicine without getting any better, I decided to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial, and to my surprise I found ease from the second dose. I continued taking them until I had used six boxes, and now I feel as well as can be.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price, by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

LIABLE FOR SERVICE.

Interesting Figures Regarding Men Who Must Enter Army.

The close of registrations for class One under the Military Service act brought some remarkable returns. In the Province of Quebec the rush continued to the end. On Saturday, the last day for registrations, there were filed in Montreal no less than 11,778 claims for exemption and 157 reports for service; in Quebec 1,500 claims for exemption and eight reports for service, and in Hull 1,000 claims for exemption and two reports for service.

For the Dominion as a whole the returns, so far as received, now stand:

Claims for exemption..	310,726
Reports for service....	21,555
Total registration..	332,301

In the percentage of total registrations of estimated available population Charlottetown stands at the head of the list with 73.22 per cent. Quebec comes next, with 72.37 per cent.; Toronto third, with 70.27 per cent., and Montreal fourth, with 70.26 per cent. The various districts compare as follows:

	Reports for service.	Claims for exemp'n.	P.C. registr'n to pop.
Charlottetown	260	7,917	73.22
Quebec	161	31,718	72.37
Toronto	4,813	53,336	70.27
Montreal	1,290	54,467	70.26
London	278	24,254	69.34
St. John	1,017	11,021	62.20
Halifax	1,842	16,629	58.56
Kingston	508	23,864	57.67
Winnipeg	2,283	18,549	51.64
Calgary	2,926	22,827	51.59
Regina	3,046	25,166	49.94
Hull	83	3,728	48.92
Kenora	57	1,679	23.99
Vancouver	2,744	10,260	22.57
Totals	21,565	310,374	57.25

It is possible, it is stated here, that the available population has been over-estimated in some of the districts showing the smaller percentages. The returns also, it is pointed out, are not complete. The table shows registrations received by registrars and does not include forms which may still be in the mails. A few days must elapse before complete returns are available.

Vancouver leads in the percentage of reports for service; Quebec is at the bottom. The "percentage of total reports for service to total registration" in all districts is as follows: Vancouver, 21.10; Kenora, 17.53; Calgary, 11.36; Halifax, 10.54; Winnipeg, 10.45; St. John, 8.97; Toronto, 8.43; Charlottetown, 6.22; Regina, 5.98; Kingston, 3.27; London, 2.36; Montreal, 2.30; Hull, 1.68; Quebec, 0.51.

Advent of the Messiah: (Christmas Lesson)—Matt. 2:1-12.

Golden Text: There is born to you this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Christ the Lord, Luke 2:11.

1. Where is Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus?

2. Where was the home of Mary and Joseph, the parents of Jesus, and how did it happen that they were at Bethlehem at this time?

3. What was the probable nationality of these "wise men"

4. Verse 2. Is there any evidence, and if so, what is it, which indicate that God, in past ages, has revealed Himself to other peoples than those of Jewish origin?

5. Give your own idea of this star that the wise men saw, which indicated to them that a Jewish King had been born; was it objective or only subjective?

6. Were the wise men right in their opinion, that Jesus was "the King of the Jews" as they were in the face of His birth?

7. Verse 3. What is the evidence for, or against, the idea that it was God's original intention for Jesus to be the literal King of the Jews, as the wise men stated, and as Herod feared?

8. Why should Herod and "all Jerusalem" be troubled at the announcement of the birth of a Jewish King?

9. Verses 4-6.—What prophet is here referred to, and where in the Bible did these priests and scribes quote from?

10. Did the prophet they quoted from, and did these priests and scribes think that the expected Christ was to be an earthly king? Why?

11. Verse 7. What is it which makes diligent study of a worthy subject, either noble or ignoble?

12. Verse 8. How would you describe a man with the motive of Herod, when he sent these wise men off on their mission of finding Jesus?

13. What if any, reason is there to believe that there are those to-day who attend church, and thus pretend they are earnestly seeking Jesus, who have practically the same motive as Herod had?

14. Verse 9. If a man to-day would see Christ, what "star" does he need to follow to be sure of being led to Him?

15. Verse 9. Give your reason for your idea whether it is to the favoured few only that God sends a "star" or its equivalent, pointing to where Jesus may be found, or are all men similarly treated?

16. Verse 10. Mention some things which always produce joy, and then describe that which produces the greatest joy to mortals known?

17. Verse 11. What are the grounds for certainty that those who really seek Jesus always find Him?

18. What are the emotions which are stirred, the motives which are formed, and the deeds which are done by everyone who really finds Him?

19. Verse 12. Is there any liability that those who live in the presence of Jesus will ever be duped into betraying Him or His cause?

20. Is the day of the supernatural guidance of God's children past, or is there reason to believe that it is as operative as ever?

Biggest Surprise Of His Life, He Says

Williamson Overcomes Troubles of Five Years Standing By Taking Tanlac

"I have never been so surprised over anything as I have over the results of Tanlac in my case," said William Williamson, a well-known brick mason, living at 1115 St. Clarens Avenue, Toronto, recently.

"My kidneys have been bothering me for four or five years," he continued," but during the past year other ailments set in and kept me feeling miserable nearly all the time I had terrible pains across my back, especially when I stooped over or tried to lift anything; then rheumatism settled in my right leg, and at times I simply suffered torture from it. The pain was so sharp and cutting at times I would almost drop in my tracks. My appetite went square back on me and nothing I would eat tasted right. I was very nervous—could hardly sleep—and I would just roll from one side of the bed to the other, and many a night I have not closed my eyes for sleep at all. I just had that dejected, worn-out feeling, had no energy and didn't care for anything.

"One day a friend of mine said: 'Why don't you try Tanlac, I have taken it, and it surely did do me good.' So with that I began taking Tanlac and improving every day. I have now taken four bottles, the rheumatism never troubles me at all, and my kidneys are in fine shape. My appetite is fine and everything I eat tastes good and agrees with me. My nerves are strong and steady now; I sleep like a log, and all my tired, depressed feelings are gone. I now have my old-time strength and energy and feel like myself again. Tanlac has certainly been a great thing for me and I don't praise it too highly."

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,— I have came to realize through the giving away of Bibles, or portions thereof, how much or some of the good in my fellow man; also Halifax, how it has shown the good in man in willingness to help in the hour of need. I have also learned that there are those who attempt to explain by natural causes the earth, sun, moon and stars. To me the first few verses of Genesis, and the 19th Psalm makes all this clear. The United States produced two distinguished men last century, one an infidel, Colonel Ingersol, the other an evangelist, Dr. L. Moody. Both lived earlier than me, so I took some notice of both, for they both wrote books. When Ingersol died, and his family, overwhelmed with grief, in 1899, D. L. Moody made his first public reference to him, when he said:

Mr. Ingersol and I started out in life about the same time, and in the same state. Of course I have been interested in watching his career. But I have never mentioned his name in public until to-night. And I don't believe in talking about a man after his death. I am sorry for his wife and children, for it is said that he was a kind husband and father, and I don't want to star open that wound. My feeling toward him has always been that of deepest pity, for a life like his seems so barren of everything that has made my life joyous and blessed. How dark must be the life of a man for whom, by his own confession, it was like a narrow vale between the peaks of two eternities.

We cry aloud and the only answer is the echo of our calling, and for whom death seemed like a leap into the dark.

How different from that of a believer of Christ? For him not only is the present life filled with the peace of God, but the future is bright with hope. He knows that for him death is only the exchanging of a shifting tent for an enduring mansion. How much Colonel Ingersol's sorrowing wife and daughters need our prayers as they stand by the still body of their loved one, if they really believe the hopeless doctrine which he taught?

Do you believe Mr. Ingersol's influence was over-rated? asked a friend.

I do not wish to talk about it, answered Mr. Moody. I believe that Ingersol was driven away from Christianity by the abuse of Christians. He was railed at by them, and he saw the dark side of Christianity; he got twisted when he was young.

Do you believe he died without any hope of the future?

I don't know. I don't see how a man can live without such a hope. It must be terrible. We are not his judges. It is for God alone to judge him.

How different when D. L. Moody came near the shore; earth recedes; heaven opens before me.

The first impulse was to try and arouse him from what appeared to be a dream. No this is no dream. Will, he replied; it is beautiful; it is like a trance; if this is death, it is sweet. There is no valley here. God is calling me and I must go.

And the spirit and the bride say come.

And let him that heareth say come.

And let him that is athirst come.

And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely.—Rev. 22 and 17.

KIMONO MADE FOR COMFORT

Kimono means comfort, but not all of these luxurious robes and coats, made in these days of extreme style, are carrying out the meaning of the word. Some of the garments are built so that they make for discomfort, tugging, tight and ill-fitting. A kimono should be loose-fitting, and the charming affair pictured here is representative of what a kimono should be. It is made in a very delicate shade of pale crepe, bound at the neck and bottom with a metal cord of red, gold and silver. At intervals translucent white beads are placed in the edging.

SIMPLICITY IN NEW STYLES

This Feature Is Particularly Notable In Street Dresses—Afternoon Frocks In Two Materials.

Trimness and simplicity are particularly notable in street dresses, says the Dry Goods Economist. Although afternoon dresses may be cut on similar lines, there is a decided tendency toward the use of two materials, silk crepe and satin, crepe and serge, etc., and there is a great amount of drapery and plaits in evidence.

Richness of effect is added to many dresses by the use of a satin body lining under crepe, in contrasting or self color.

Loose panels and plaited panels, in varied lengths, predominate in street dresses and there is a preponderance of the turnover collar extending to the waistline.

The regulation round or square collar also continues to be popular. A new coat-dress shows a standing collar, the dress fastening on the side to the waistline.

THIS PINCUSHION IS USEFUL

It Also Makes a Dainty Decoration to Be Suspended From the Dressing Table.

The pincushion in the sketch makes a dainty decoration suspended from the dressing table, and will be found useful, for it holds pins and needles of all sizes, and also has a ring for safety pins.

Make a little bag of white sateen and fill it with sawdust or bran. Use a piece of material that measures 6 by 5 inches.

equally well, providing it is wide enough.

Find the exact center of this pad, then take a prettily colored narrow ribbon, and bind it round the center as in sketch. Secure this band at the back of the pad with a stitch.

Now, with a piece of the same ribbon 6 inches in length, make a loop to hang the cushion up by. Sew to the top of the pad; at the bottom of the pad sew another similar loop, but first of all thread on to it a bone ring.

The dainty article is now finished. It only remains to stick pins of assorted sizes on the pad and to fasten several safety pins on the bone ring.

Cravenetted Ostrich Neqs.

"Cravenette" finish ostrich feathers are the latest and are said to withstand dampness. The "cravenetting" is said to leave no apparent trace"—they are just as fine and soft as ever.

CATTLE MARKET

Yesterday's market was the smallest so far in the present month, little more than two hundred entries being in the pens. All lines, including sheep, hogs, and calves, were steady to firm, and everything was about cleaned up by noon.

One lamb sold at $19 per cwt., and a few hogs at $17.25 off cars, but these figures are exceptional. The market was a small and fairly healthy one, the stuff consisting almost entirely of good to common butchers' cattle, with a few milkers. Other classes were pracically absent altogether from the yards.

JURY DECLARES MEANS NOT GUILTY OF DEATH CHARGE

CONCORD, N.C., Dec. 18.—Gaston Bullock Means has been freed of the charge that he shot and killed Mrs. Maude A. Robinson King, whose confidential financial agent he was. The verdict was returned at five minutes after ten o'clock on Sunday morning, when this sleepy little Southern town had not yet emerged for he journey to its few churches.

Justice E. B. Cline was lingering over a late breakfast at the St. Cloud Hotel when he received word that the jury desired his presence in the Court Room. Accompanied by Sheriff Caldwell he hurried to the ancient Court House and ascended the bench.

Members of Means' family had not expected a verdict so early and were unprepared for the summons. When Means, dejected after his night of uncertainty in his cell, entered the court room he found there only a handful of spectators and only two of the eight lawyers who had defended him.

Sitting in her accustomed place, however, was Means' wife. Her face showed plainly the excitement under which she was labouring. Her eyes were red and swollen and her cheeks were stained from crying. She greeted her husband affectionately as he slumped carelessly into his chair beside her.

Means' Father Present.

Behind Means sat his father, Col. W. G. Means, the only other member of the defendant's family who had been able to reach the court room at the early hour.

The jury filed into the box as the elder Means took his seat and patted his son encouragingly on the back. Means' eyes were riveted on the twelve men, farmers and mill workers, who had decided for him the question of life or death.

The few necessary legal formalities appeared to pall on the anxious defendant. No sign that might indicate the nature of the verdict escaped any of the twelve men. Means looked searchingly at them, but their eyes were turned away from him. Those in the court room who watched the scene quickly gained the incorrect impression that the attitude of the jurors indicated a verdict in favourable to the defendant.

The court clerk, his eyes still drowsy from his late Sabbath sleep, arose finally and said:

"Gentlemen of the jury, look upon the defendant; defendant, look upon the jurors. Do you find this defendant guilty or not guilty?"

Pronounced Not Guilty.

A low gasp escaped Means' lips. His eyes were fixed steadfastly upon the face of the foreman, Frank A. Goodman, farmer, County Commissioner of Cabarus County, politician and distant relative by marriage, of Means. During the three weeks of the trial Mr. Goodman was publicly pronounced the "strong man" of the jury. As was predicted, the other jurors chose him as their foreman and spokesman.

"Not guilty," promptly replied Mr. Goodman, and then, for the first time since they had entered the room all twelve of the jurors turned their eyes upon Means.

A thankful smile had spread over his face. He caught quickly the full significance of the verdict, Colonel Means again patted his son's shoulder. Mrs. Means, apparently unable to face the jury, seemed not to have understood. Her face buried in her hands, she made no movement toward the husband who had been returned to her. The freed man turned, caught his wife in his arms, and kissed her several times.

There was a murmur among the spectators as the jury foreman pronounced the words, but Justice Cline announced that any one participating in any sort of a demonsration would be cited for contempt.

Ten to Two for Acquittal.

Two hours and five minutes of discussion preceded the jury's return of its verdict. They received the case at seven o'clock last night and debated Means' fate for two hours and twenty minutes. Then they went to bed.

No direct statement of the jury's first vote could be obtained, but it was clearly indicated that when the first of the three ballots that were taken had been counted the result was ten to two for acquittal.

The trial began 26th November and lasted three full weeks. It is regarded as the most important criminal trial ever held in this State. Certainly it was the most sensational from the local point of view. Eighty-eight witnesses were examined. Feeling in the town ran high, especially since Means' defending lawyers with one exception endeavoured to introduce the element of sectionalism against witnesses from New York.

After the verdict Means hurried to his father's home here and received there the congratulations of Mrs. Mary C. Melvin, the dead woman's sister, who has stood by Means from the moment of the mysterious shooting. Frank I. Osborne, brother of James W. Osborne, of New York, who was Means' chief counsel, received the largest measure of credit for the success of Means' defence. The freed man has made no statement since his release.

It was clearly indicated that Means will fight desperately any attempt that may be made to extradite him to New York or Chicago in connection with proceedings that are expected to be started in those cities as a result of the disappearance of most of Mrs. King's fortune.

LACK HEAVY ARTILLERY.

United States Troops Overseas Deficient in That Arm of Service.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—Much of the testimony regarding the equipment of American forces abroad given to the Senate investigating committee by Major-General Crozier, chief of ordnance, was "sharply contradicted" to-day by Representative McCormack, recently returned from the battle fronts. In heavy artillery, he told the committee, the American overseas forces are particularly deficient. He also told of shortages in other ordnance and some differences over clothing.

RED POPPIES.

Once when the blood of young Adonis flow'd,
Slain,
Nectar besprinkled, drenched the sterile plain;
Spring beauteous blossoms from the enfirtled ground,
Shedding sweet fragrance on the breeze around.

Still where the patriots' blood in battle flows,
For freedom's right, the crimson poppie grows,
Token, that he who for his country dies,

Then well may France, where myriads have bled,
Be far and wide, with waving poppies spread,
And gory battle-ground of nations made
Belgium's red soil, with flowerets be arrayed.

For faith and hope, and deathless fame they plead,
Yet worthier still shall the patriots meed,
For, from the blood-soaked sod a rich increase

—Mrs. A. F. Calder.

The Real Middlemen; The Men Who Get The Money

Who They Are: Where They Are; How They Get It, and How to Catch Them—An Interesting Article by H. Bronson Cowan, Editor-in-Chief Farm and Dairy, Peterborough.

The cry against the middleman is becoming insistent, even menacing. For twenty years it has been growing. Now it demands to be heard. It is being raised both by farmers and by city consumers. Recently the Dominion government has been stirred to action. Hon. T. A. Crerar, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, has declared that it is the intention of the government to see that steps are taken immediately to reduce the spread between the price the farmer receives and the price the consumer pays for the products of the farm.

This raises the issue: Who are the real middlemen? On this point conflicting views are being expressed. While many are claimed to be the guilty parties most people find it difficult to produce proof that the middlemen whom they suspect are guilty. Even Hon. Mr. Crerar is likely to discover before he gets through that his Department has tackled the biggest contract it has ever faced and that he is utterly powerless to secure any substantial improvement in existing conditions until the whole policy of our system of government is changed.

The chief difficulty in the way of securing a settlement of this problem is that the root of the evil—for there are great evils—lies deeper than is commonly supposed. Because of this condition people are in many cases, blaming the wrong parties and advocating remedies which are inadequate and in some cases even dangerous. The possibility is that it may take so long to find the real causes and their remedies that dangerous conditions in society will develop before the situation is adequately dealt with.

THE ORDINARY MIDDLEMAN.

Before I can show you who are the real middlemen it is necessary that I shall demonstrate that some at least of the middlemen who are commonly blamed for existing conditions are largely if not entirely innocent of the charges that are being hurled against them. As long as we believe that certain innocent parties are guilty so long will we continue to believe that the guilty parties are innocent.

Most people believe that it is the men who handle the farmers' goods between the time these goods leave the farm and the time they are sold to the consumers who constitute the real middlemen. We are told that there are far too many people handling goods between the consumers and the producers, that these people extort unjust profits and that both producers and consumers are being exploited by them. Many thorough investigations have been conducted in an effort to substantiate these charges, yet I have never found any of these charges to be finally proven. Let us examine a few examples.

THE COST OF EGGS.

Some years ago the farmers in Peterboro county, living in the vicinity of the city of Peterboro, were told as thousands of farmers have been told elsewhere, that there were too many middlemen handling their eggs between the time these eggs left the farm and the time they were sold to the consumer in such cities as Montreal and Toronto. Our local farmers were urged to cooperate and save money by handling their eggs themselves thereby reducing the number of middlemen. We did so, but what was the result? The first thing we found was that we needed a man who would go around and collect the eggs and bring them to the shipping station in Peterboro. Then we found that we needed a warehouse and someone who would candle, grade and pac the eggs properly. Next, we discovered that if we were to establish a permanent city outlet for our eggs, it was going to be necessary for us to be able to supply our customers with eggs of good quality all the year round. Otherwise we were going to be forced to sell our eggs to the wholesalers in the large cities instead of direct to the consumer. The reason the consumers were not ready to deal with us was because unless we could guarantee a uniform supply throughout the year, they preferred to deal with firms like the wholesalers who, because of their cold storage facilities, and their ability to make importations when necessary, were always able to maintain a supply of eggs on hand. We discovered, therefore, that we were going to need warehouses with cold storage facilities in Montreal or Toronto where our eggs could be handled and sold to the retailers. We realized that we could not hope to sell to the consumers direct because they would not come to our warehouses for their eggs. The result of it all was that we did not discover a single middleman whose services we were able to do without, without replacing him with a man of our own. More than this, we found that the competition between these dealers was such that our chances of succeeding in competition against them did not appear very bright.

THE PRICE OF FRUIT.

For years fruit growers have contended that the wholesale fruit dealers and retailers were getting altogether too large a share of the final selling price of their fruit. Time and again I have heard these charges made against the middlemen. Yet I have never seen the fruit growers succeed in opening a store of their own for the sale of their fruit in any city, and conducting the business at a profit. On the other hand I have seen a Toronto retail fruit dealer face an audience of 100 or more wide-awake fruit growers and submit to them a detailed statement of his cost of doing business, including a record of his sales and profits, and defy them to prove that he was obtaining an unjust profit. The fruit growers were unable to do so. This dealer proved that the cost of doing business in a city like Toronto was so great that by the time he had paid his rentals, the wages of his help, his taxes, allowed for bad debts, losses on fruit that went bad on his hands, and the hundred and one other charges he had to meet, that it was absolutely necessary that he should charge the consumer a much larger price than he paid for that fruit to the growers. Yet he did not realize a large or unfair profit for himself.

Recently the Fruit and Vegetable Committee appointed by Food Controller Hanna had the wholesale fruit dealers of several eastern cities submit their business books for their examination. After several weeks' investigation it was discovered that these firms were doing business on a very narrow margin of profit, so small, in fact, that one business firm that had had a turn over of $1,000000 during the year had had profits of about $1,500. A leading official of the Dominion Department of Agriculture informed me that although he had always supposed that this firm was doing a profitable business, after seeing its books he had decided that he would not take the business as a gift.

THE MILK DEALERS.

Farmers who produce milk for city consumption often complain vehemently that the city dealers are charging consumers unduly high prices for milk in view of the fact that the milk remains in their possession during only a few hours. Nevertheless frequent investigations have shown that very few milk dealers make much money while on the other hand many fail. Investigations conducted recently in the city of Vancouver by a committee of the city council, and in Ottawa by the Milk Committee appointed by Food Controller Hanna, disclosed the fact that the dealers were not making unduly high profits because the expenses of operation were surprisingly high. In the end the only suggestion both committees were able to make was that some system should be devised which would reduce the number of dealers delivering milk to customers on the same streets. This it was thought would prevent overlapping and make possible a considerable saving.

Even such a desirable reform as this, however, is open to very serious objection in that it would tend to give a monopoly of the milk trade of the city to one or two firms with the result that consumers who became dissatisfied with the milk delivered to them would not be able to change milkmen, as they now can in cases where milk of poor quality is sold. They would have still less control than ever also over future advances in the price of milk, as there would be only one source of supply. Again it is a case where high city rentals, high wages combined with bad collections, breakages of bottles, milk souring and other similar factors make it difficult for most city milkmen to make a profit from their labors and investment. There are some exceptions to this rule where a firm has been able to establish a big turnover and thereby to somewhat reduce expenses. They are not numerous.

THE COAL DEALERS.

Take another illustration: A year ago the people of the city of Peterboro, as well as of many other cities, were faced with a coal shortage. Loud cries were raised that the coal dealers of the city were the cause of the trouble. It was believed by many that they were getting rich at the expense of the poor people of the city. A clamour was raised that the city should deal with the situation. Finally the city obtained permission from the legislature to engage in the coal business. This year the city has bought considerable quantities of coal. But it has not been able to reduce the price of coal even although it has not charged the public for all its services. Instead the public has received an education in the costs of the ordinary middlemen, in doing business, such as import duties, freight, loading, screening, cartage charges and other expenses which, as far as can be seen, are unavoidable. To-day we are not hearing anything in the city about the coal dealers being grafters or exploiters of the public. Yet there continues to be a shortage of coal.

THE WM. DAVIES CO.

Let us examine even the case of the Wm. Davies Co. True it is that the company made enormous profits last year, nearly $2,000,000. In this it was a great exception. But did you notice that it was revealed by the investigation that these profits were not made by paying the farmers too little for their hogs and charging the consumers too much for their pork and bacon? Instead, the complaint was made during the investigation by one of the lawyers that the competing packers had forced the price too high for the welfare of city consumers, by competing against one another for their supply of hogs. The somewhat astounding fact was also shown that the Wm. Davies Company, in 1916, made a profit of only 3-5 of a cent per pound, and in 1917, of only 2-5 of a cent a pound on the goods it handled. The profits of the Matthews-Blackwell Company did not exceed these figures. Thus if the substantial profits these companies made had been redistributed to the producers and the consumers, it would not have increased the price to the producer or lowered the price to the consumer last year by more than 1-5 of a cent a pound. Their great profits were made possible only by the fact that they did an enormous business on a very small margin of profit, so small that most small butchers and packing plants could not compete against them. Had their margins of profit been unduly high it would have been easy for any small butcher to buy and handle his hogs and thus break up their combination, yet most small butchers found it impossible to do this and therefore they had to buy most of their supplies from these firms. No suggestion was made as to how the cost of handling the products of the company could be reduced.

While the Wm. Davies Company made a profit of only 2-5 of a cent a pound last year, it cost them in their retail stores 19 to 21 cents a pound to handle the goods they sold. It would seem, therefore, that even if the profits per pound were not large, the

THIS AUTOMOBILE ILLUSTRATES HOW THE TARIFF TAXES THE COMMON PEOPLE.

People who favour high tariffs often fail to realize the important effect the tariff has on the high cost of living. The illustration shows a Ford automobile. They cost this year in Canada $495. In the United States they cost $360. The tariff accounts for the difference in price of $135. It is understood that about 20,000 of these automobiles were sold in Canada this year. Multiply $135 by 20,000 and we find reason to believe that the tariff cost the owners of Ford automobiles alone in Canada this year $2,700,000. This money was not received by the Canadian Government. It went into the treasury of the Ford Motor Co., of Canada. The charge was largely passed on to the Canadian people in the ways described in the accompanying article. Multiply this example by hundreds of other protected articles and we begin to see what our tariff laws cost the people of Canada. Henry Ford is said to be a believer in free trade as it would greatly reduce the cost of his raw material.

TWO "MIDDLEMEN" OF WHOM THE WORLD HAS HEARD MUCH

The two multi-millionaires here shown, J. D. Rochefeller and Andrew Carnegie have taken, and the interests they represent are still taking, through their control of oil and steel mines, their full share of the great difference in price which exists between what the farmer sells his products for and what the city consumer pays for them. The accompanying article describes how it is done. Mr. Rockefeller's wealth has been computed at as high as $2,000,000,000. Mr. Andrew Carnegie has already given away several hundred million dollars. The people of the continent and almost of the world have been forced to contribute to the building up of these enormous fortunes.

KISS HIM!

What will you give him for Christmas?

Give him what he will like best.

He's human, with a man's failings and frailties; he has hurt you, has grieved you, has brought tears to your eyes. But then again he has been kind and considerate, has shared your sorrows, just as he has shared your joys. What if he has brought clouds into your life, he also has brought sunshine! He's been a good dad ly, and, as husbands go, he's been a pretty good one.

And after all, his worries have been big, his troubles hard to bear, and, perhaps, he was not always to blame. . . .

So, when he comes downstairs on Christmas morning, give him the best of gifts—give him a kiss—and put your heart into it!

Then give him the one thing that, better than all else, will chase away dull care, and gloom, and worries and troubles, big and little—give him a box of ARABELA Cigars.

10 or 25 or 50 in a box.

The tobacconist around the corner has them—has sold them these forty years.

Mild, mellow, of delicate aroma, they are to-day, better than ever; the best at the price.

LOSSES TO METHODISM.

Rev. A. T. Moore Reports on Halifax Disaster.

TORONTO, Dec. 19.— A vivid description of the terrible losses sustained by Methodism in the Halifax disaster is given by Dr. A. T. Moore, who has just returned from that city.

The losses he enumerates as follows: Kay Street Church and parsonage are completely destroyed, a loss of $25,000; Charles Street Church, a comparatively new building, so seriously shaken that its restoration will cost not less than $15,-000; Charles Street parsonage practically needs rebuilding, which will cost $5,000; Brunswick Street Church, one of the oldest there, suffered between $10,000 and $12,000 damage; Grafton Street Church will require repairs to the extent of $8,-000; Oxford Street Church and Rabie Street Church, $3,000. The church and parsonage at Dartmouth both require entire rebuilding, which will cost $25,000, and the Methodist Book Room sustained a loss of $10,-000, making the heavy total of $107,000.

THE REAL MIDDLEMEN

cost of operation was unduly high. This was the case. It is right here where lies the secret of the whole difficulty. The cost of operation in the lines of business mentioned; as well as in many others, is too high. It has caused the ruin of hundreds of firms having only a small turn over. Until we find what causes this condition and take steps to reduce the cost of doing business we will never be able to solve the problem why the farmer receives so little for his produce and the consumer pays so much.

EVOLUTION OF THE SITUATION.

Existing conditions have evolved largely during the last half century.

Fifty years ago, when our cities were small, it was possible for city residents to obtain most of their supplies from farmers living nearby. The farmers used to drive in with their vegetables, meat, butter and eggs and sell them direct to the consumers. Thus, there were few middle men to come between the consumer and the producer.

During the past fifty years our cities have grown rapidly. Farm produce now has to be shipped long distances. This has made it necessary to enlist the services of other parties to transfer this produce from the producer to the consumer Because it has been easy for people to see the growing number of the middlemen who handle their food, it has been natural for them to conclude that they are the parties who are guilty of creating existing conditions The cry of protest against the increasing cost of living has, therefore, been directed largely at them. The public appears to fail to recognize the fact that still other influences have been at work during the past fifty years which constitute the main cause of their difficulties, rather than the much-abused middlemen. It is because these other factors in the situation are not so readily apparent that the public has not appreciated their importance. Let us examine some of them.

THE REAL MIDDLEMEN.

The real middlemen who are exploiting the public may, for the most part, be placed in three classes.

First, there are those men who have gained a monopoly of the natural resources of the country, such as coal, steel and oil mines, water powers, timent-wide monopoly of land. These cessities of the common people.

Second, there are those men who are growing wealthy through the con-timber limits and other similiar ne-men are the worst offenders of all. They are closely allied to those mentioned in class one.

Third, there are those men who have been able to form trusts and combines behind our tariff walls, and by squeezing out other small competitors, reducing the supply and increasing the price, have thus been enabled to exploit the public to the extent of millions upon millions of dollars a year.

Closely allied with the three classes specified might be mentioned another class of men who are to be found associated with all the foregoing groups. These are the men who, because of the monopolies they enjoy, including in some cases railway rights of way, have been able to water the stock of the companies in which they are interested to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars and then to force the people to pay them prices which enable them to declare dividends on this watered stock or to resell it in the form of stocks and bonds, often at prices far above par. Let us examine very briefly how these monopolies place the public under tribute to them.

THE SMALL PIECE OF LAND ON WHICH THIS BUILDING STANDS IS WORTH ABOUT $1,000,000.

High land values impose an enormous burden on the people of Canada. The illustration shows the Dominion Bank building, King and Yonge Sts., Toronto. The land on which it stands, is worth about $1,000,000; across the road is the C.P.R. building. It stands on land also worth about $1,000,000, the owners of which have leased it to the C.P.R. for 99 years. They draw an enormous rental but have to give no labour or service in return. The tenants in the building pay this rental in their rentals and charge it up to the public in the cost of their services. The public pays it in the end. This is an extreme case but only one out of tens of thousands. The accompanying article explains how this condition affects the prosperity of the common people.

THE MONOPOLY OF NATURAL RESOURCES.

All the great coal mines of the continent were seized years ago by small groups of men who are able to regulate the supply of coal for all the rest of the people. Government reports show that there is an abundance of coal to supply the needs of the public for several centuries to come. The policy of the coal barons has been to produce only enough coal to enable them to charge the highest possible price for it, thus netting themselves the greatest possible returns at the least expense. Many enormous fortunes have been made by these monopolists. The public pays for these charges in a hundred and one ways. Every man pays part of these charges when he buys coal for his own use. What he does not realize, however, is that he pays another part when he buys almost every article his needs necessitate. For instance, the manufacturer or store-keeper includes the cost of the coal he buys in the selling price of the article he sells. Therefore, when a person buys a suit of clothes, a piece of furniture or a meal in a restaurant the cost of the coal used in their manufacture or preparation is added to the price charged for them. Thus if we take a restaurant keeper or a butcher as our example, we find that part of the extra prices they are froced to charge for the articles they handle represent unfair prices they are required to pay—even although they may not realize it—to the coal barons for the coal they buy. Still another of the charges is concealed in the wages that they pay their help, as they must pay their employees large enough wages to enable them to buy coal at the prices set by the coal monopolists.

The same principle applies to all other necessities. J. D. Rockefeller is an example of a man who has made hundreds of millions of dollars through his monopoly of the oil wells of this continent. Very nearly every person who buys oil is forced to pay tribute to the Standard Oil Trust. Thus to the extent that the restaurant keeper or the butcher use oil, either in running an automobile, oil stove, or in any other capacity, these charges must be added to the cost of the meat, butter, eggs and other articles which they sell. In such a case, who is the grafter?

Andrew Carnegie is a man who made his millions through the monopoly of great steel mines. In a hundred and one ways the public has been forced to pay tribute to this monopoly represented largely by the United States Steel Corporation. It is paid in the cost of the steel used in the buildings erected in every city, in the agricultural implements the farmer requires to produce his crops, in the waggons the butcher and storekeeper require to deliver their goods, in the stoves and many of the cooking utensils used by the restaurant keeper. All these surplus charges have to be added, in one form or another, to the charges the butcher and restaurant keeper make for the butter, meat and goods they sell. It all forms part of the difference between what the farmer receives and what the city consumer pays.

WATER POWERS.

The high price of coal is enormously increasing the value of the water powers of the country. Long, however, before the public realized the value of these water powers private parties had succeeded in obtaining rights to them which in many cases have been capitalized and sold at enormous values. A member of parliament informed me some time ago, of a water power in central Ontario for which a lease had been secured from the Dominion Government about twenty years ago for 100 years at $2 a year, representing an expenditure of $200. This water power was being held out of use in order that the lease might be resold to the public for $300,000.

Recently the Ontario Government announced the purchase of the water powers in central Ontario for $14,-600,000. Several million dollars of this sum represented money that had been invested in the development of these powers. Several million dollars, however, must have represented the monopoly rights which the owners of these water powers had secured and capitalized to their own advantage.

Although the public does not realize it, they pay these inflated prices. In this case the Hydro Electric Commission will charge a price for the power it sells to the manufacturing establishments throughout Central Ontario that will enable them to meet expenses on the basis of the $14,000,000 paid for these water powers. These manufacturers will charge this inflated price against their costs of operation and include it in the price charged for the articles they sell to the public. The towns and cities which use power generated from these falls for street lighting will include the extra costs in the taxes the public has to pay. These taxes in turn are paid by the butcher and restaurant keeper and are added to the costs of the butter, eggs, meat, milk and other farm products which they sell to the city consumers. Are the restaurant keeper and the butcher, to say nothing of the other classes mentioned to blame if, under these conditions, they are forced to charge more for the goods they handle than they otherwise might? It would hardly seem so.

In exactly the same way groups of men have seized the timber limits, silver and copper mines and other natural resources of the country and capitalized them for their own advantage. In every case the public is being forced to pay the piper. Thus we begin to see that the articles procured from these sources of wealth are costing us more than they should because away in the background are groups of people

Magnet Mountain

The Story of Its Power of Attraction

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Linn Ellison looked at his compass for a long time before he reached out and held it up to his companion's eyes.

"What did I tell you, Baker?" he asked quietly.

Baker rubbed his red hair perplexedly. "It certainly does act cantankerous," he admitted. "If any one should ask me I'd say that there was a very powerful magnet close by; but, as for making me believe that Magnet mountain is really and truly magnetic, it can't be done."

"What is the matter with my compass and your watch?" demanded Linn.

"Don't bother me with batty questions," answered Baker loftily. "Permit me to pursue my study of the classics in peace." And he folded back the pages of his paper backed detective story, propped his elbows on the ground near the bright firelight and read absorbedly.

Linn laughed and stretched his long limbs.

"Surely McOlin must have had some authority for his statement that there existed in this vicinity a mountain with strong magnetic powers," he mused, turning over the pages of Dr. McOlin's "Wanderings In Out of the Way Places." "Here he speaks of the peculiar behavior of his delicate instruments and of his visit to the mountain and how his suspicions were confirmed. He sends his book to his publishers in New York and thenceforth drops out of sight entirely. No one knows what has become of Sandy McOlin. I wonder."

Baker looked up and grinned.

"Still wondering about the mountain?" he gibed.

"They call it 'Magnet mountain,'" contended Linn, scowling earnestly.

"They named me Percy Rollo Baker, but do I look like it?" demanded the strong featured giant sarcastically.

"I'm going for a walk," he called back.

"Don't get too near the mountain!" sang Baker, his nose deep in the book.

Across the open patch of moonlight and into the narrow trail that wound through the spruces on the hillside Linn Ellison found himself undergoing strange sensations. A new and powerful vitality seemed to possess him as he mounted upward. At the top of the hill he paused for a moment, looking up at the majestic grandeur of the snow capped peak of Magnet mountain. Bathed in moonlight, the peak glistened like polished silver, and somewhere below, among the black pines that clothed the sides, there gleamed a yellow light.

"I wonder!" muttered Linn again.

Now he plunged down the trail and crossed a little valley, to climb steadily up the opposite slope toward the silver peak of Magnet mountain.

He lost sight of the yellow light immediately, and his way up the mountain led through untracked forests of pine and fir and spruce. His feet slipped on the fallen needles, and in his nostrils was the sweet pungency of balsamic odors. He was panting a little when he paused to rest. Throwing himself down under the low spreading branches of a giant spruce, he gave himself up to the weariness that oppressed his eyelids.

He slept.

Linn Ellison awoke with a start to find that the moonlight had invaded his resting place. He sat up and looked dazedly at the apparition that dilated across the space and hovered in the shadows.

It was a girl clad in a short skirted khaki costume. Her little feet, in high tan boots, were plainly visible, while her face was in deep shadow, but Linn saw that she was slender, lithe and graceful and that her slim fingers were clasped about the barrel of a shotgun. There was a tantalizing uncertainty about the face that could not be seen.

"Who is there?" he asked sharply.

A quick little sigh answered him, followed by a sweet, quavering voice:

"Who are you? Oh, who are you?" she inquired.

"Then you are alive after all!" exclaimed Linn joyously, for no reason that he could explain. "Upon my word, I thought you were a ghost!"

"Who are you?" repeated the girl more steadily, as if reassured by the sound of his voice. "Please tell me what you are doing here."

"I am here for the shooting. Surely, this isn't private property?"

"Oh, no! Only I needed help, and I wondered if you could be trusted." She came forward then, and the moonlight revealed the secret of her face.

Linn Ellison stared speechlessly at her.

"Forgive me," cried Linn. "I can be trusted, be assured of that. What can I do?"

"My father is ill. We have a little camp up yonder, and I need brandy and medicines for him. There is no one to send, and I cannot go alone."

"I have a small medicine case in my pocket," was Linn's prompt reply. "Take me to your father, and I will do what I can for him. After that you may call upon me or my companion for any aid you need. Baker can ride back to Red Fork for anything you require."

"Thank you," she said briefly. "Follow me, please."

Soon they emerged into a small cleared space, where the embers of a fire glowed sullenly in a stone faced hole before a small group of tents.

The girl tossed a pine knot on the fire and fastened back the flaps of one of the tents. She lighted a lantern and hung it from the tent pole.

"Come in, please," she said hurriedly to Linn.

He bent his tall head and entered. It was sparsely furnished with a narrow cot, some empty boxes, covered with rugs; a folding camp table and some leather traveling cases piled in one corner.

On the cot was the gaunt form of an old man. His white hair framed a delicate, wrinkled face, whose black eyes stared piercingly at the stranger.

"Joyce, who is that man?" he demanded feebly.

"He is a friend I found in the forest, father," she soothed him. "He has a medicine case, and I'm sure he has something that will do you good."

Linn came forward, tossed his cap aside and sat down by the bed.

"My name is Linn Ellison," he said frankly. "I'm here for the shooting. My guide and companion is down at my camp across the valley. Your daughter tells me you are ill and in need of medicine. I will do what I can for you, sir, and Baker will ride to Red Fork for anything else you may need."

"You are very kind," said the old man tremulously. "It is all my fault, this predicament. Not a word, Joyce, my dear. Let me tell Mr. Ellison how I decided to prolong my stay here and how I persuaded you to spend the winter here and how I have been ill with fever and how all my men have deserted me and taken money and supplies with them, and"—

"Take some stimulant first and tell me the story afterward," urged Linn, opening the medicine case and taking out quinine and some compressed beef tablets.

When he had finished he said with a faint smile:

"Mr. Ellison, if I told you that I was Alexander McOlin would you be any the wiser for that information?"

"Dr. Sandy McOlin!" cried Linn incredulously. "Why, sir, your wonderful book is my closest companion, and only this evening I was wondering over your disappearance. What good luck!" He clasped the thin hand in both his own strong brown ones.

Dr. McOlin struggled to sit up, and Linn placed an arm under the bowed shoulders.

"If you will compose yourself to sleep, sir, I will have my copy of your book here by daylight."

When the regular breathing assured them that Dr. McOlin was indeed receiving the rest that he needed the girl and the man who had met only a brief hour ago passed out of the tent and stood before the campfire. In a moment the girl spoke:

"You are the first one who has happened this way for six months. I have had to depend upon my gun for much of our food. My meeting you tonight was the most wonderful blessing that could have happened. Many of the people hereabout are afraid to come to the mountain. There is a tradition that it is strongly magnetized, and of course father's investigations have in a measure confirmed the story, only there is nothing alarming about the fact; it is merely interesting. But after father had sent the last pages of his book manuscript to New York he conceived the idea of remaining here for the winter and pursuing his investigations. The result is that we have been here alone ever since the first month, when the six men who composed the party robbed my father of money and provisions and deserted us, leaving us with few stores and not even one pack horse. You can imagine our plight."

She smiled bravely into Linn's eyes.

"I am most happy that it is now over," said Linn, dizzy with the glance of her wonderful eyes.

The pink dawn was breaking above the distant ranges when Baker, pale and anxious, saw Linn Ellison come crashing through the thicket into their camp.

"What in thunderation"— he was beginning heatedly, when Linn held up a protesting hand.

"Magnet mountain did it," said that happy young man as he threw himself down before the fire.

"Magnet mountain!" repeated Baker, staring at him. "Do you mean to say you've been up on the mountain?"

"I've been there," returned the other. "And found the magnet, I suppose?"

"And discovered the greatest attraction in the world," said Linn dreamily.

"Crazy as a loon!" muttered Baker. "All on account of that magnetized mountain. I do believe there's something in it after all."

And when he heard the whole story from Linn Ellison's lips and after he had seen Joyce McOlin herself the skeptical Baker had to admit that Magnet mountain did possess a powerful attraction.

"And I might have been the lucky fellow instead of you if I'd only gone prowling up the mountain and not pored over the classics," he grumbled, tossing his dime novel into the fire. "I always said that a taste for literature was a drawback sometimes."

Had Experience.

Here is one of Mr. Pett Ridge's stories. It was in the early days of the advanced movement of woman suffrage, when by the magistrate's orders a number of "enthusiasts" went to Holloway jail. Among them was a most excellent charwoman who was employed at Clement's Inn. A sympathetic meeting was held on their release, at which the chairman spoke in eloquent terms. "Here you have," he remarked, "a body of delicately nurtured, earnest minded women who for some trifling infraction of the law find themselves condemned to prison, and there for the first time in their lives—" "Beg pardon, sir, for interrupting," said the charwoman, jumping up hastily, "but I think I ought to tell you that I did once get seven days for banging my old man on the nose!"

An Incident of Independence Day

By EUNICE BLAKE

Alice MacGregor was an American girl with Scotch ancestry. How many suitors there were for Miss MacGregor's hand only Miss MacGregor knew, for she never spoke of her offers to any one. Certain it is that there were two whose attentions were so marked as to be especially noticeable. These were John Kershaw, an Englishman, who had recently come to America, and Michael O'Connor.

Miss MacGregor, being a bit of a coquette—what girl is not?—may have accepted the attentions of one of these men as a foil for the other, but if this were true it was impossible for any one to tell which was the foil and which the man foiled. There were those who declared that the lady listened to both these suitors for the purpose of worrying them.

A crisis came in this triangular love affair on the Fourth of July. Mr. O'Connor wrote Miss MacGregor a note inviting her to accept a seat in a window above the store where he was employed to witness the Fourth of July parade. Miss MacGregor replied that she had already made a partial engagement for the day. She was not sure. She would know by the evening before the Fourth and would advise him. She had already received an invitation from Mr. Kershaw to the same effect and had written him the same answer she had sent O'Connor.

Now, each of the rivals knew very well that the partial engagement mentioned referred to the other. Mr. Kershaw, on the afternoon before Independence day, called on Miss MacGregor for a more definite reply to his invitation. She received him kindly, but declared that she did not think it would be appropriate for an American girl, especially one of Scotch descent, to celebrate Independence day with an Englishman. There had been a hereditary feud between the English and Scotch races until the crowns were united in one king, and there had been a long fight between the English and Americans. Why should she, a MacGregor born in America, celebrate the Fourth of July with an Englishman?

"But all that has passed and gone," protested Kershaw, failing to detect that the young lady was chaffing him.

"It's the impropriety of the thing," she persisted.

Mr. Kershaw left her without having secured a consent, and later Mr. O'Connor called.

"I don't think, Mr. O'Connor," said Miss MacGregor, "that it would be in order for me to view the Fourth of July procession in your company."

"Why not?" asked the young man, astonished.

"But I'm Irish; not British at all."

"Ireland was a part of the mother country that oppressed the colonies. Besides, I had a great-greatuncle who fought under the Scotch-Irish banner at the battle of the Boyne. Your ancestors were on the other side."

"Hang my ancestors! What do I care for a fight that occurred more than two centuries ago?"

"Nevertheless, the Fourth of July is a day that is, or should be, near to the heart of every American. It would be hurtful to my feelings to celebrate it in company with one whose ancestors were on the other side in the fight for independence."

"But we're all of the same blood—English, Scotch, Irish and Americans."

"Family feuds are the most bitter."

Mr. O'Connor was obliged to depart with no more comfort than his rival had received.

During the evening Miss MacGregor called up each of the rivals by telephone and told him that she would occupy a seat on the stand from which the parade would be reviewed by the governor and she would be happy to see him there. She regretted that for the reasons given it was not appropriate that she should accept his kind invitation, but a bit of a chat would be in order.

At first each of the gentlemen was so disgruntled at this disposition of his invitation that he vowed he would not go near the reviewing stand. But curiosity got the better of both. Miss MacGregor would undoubtedly have an escort. Who would that escort be? Not only curiosity, but rivalry, turned the scale.

Independence day opened bright, and a multitude of stars and stripes fluttered in the sunlight. Both of the suitors took positions where they could look upon the reviewing stand, and as soon as they saw Miss MacGregor take her seat they started simultaneously from different points to go to speak to her, reaching her at the same time. Beside her sat a gentleman with black hair and eyes, who, seeing the others approach to speak with Miss MacGregor, arose and lifted his hat with extreme politeness.

"Permit me to introduce to you, gentlemen," said the lady, "Mr. Marivand. Mr. Marivand is a descendant of the Marquis de Lafayette, who came over from France during our struggle for independence with an army to help us and rendered us valuable assistance."

Mr. Marivand bowed very low. To Miss MacGregor's eye was a sparkle which the Irishman perceived, but to which the Englishman was obtuse. However, both the visiting gentlemen, after a few remarks upon the beautiful day, withdrew, leaving the field to the descendant of Lafayette.

Miss MacGregor has not yet settled upon a husband.

MOTHERS OF CANADA
PREPARE FOR TROUBLE

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, and when a woman passes through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe organic disturbances. Many thousands in this section would testify as do the following:

St. Catharines, Ont.—"Over forty years ago I was restored to health by taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It was after medicine and doctors had failed to help me or give relief. I had, through overwork, become all run-down in health. I was weak and finally became a nervous wreck. The 'Prescription' was recommended to me, and at the time I started to take it I had not been able to do anything for over a year. I took the 'Favorite Prescription' and the 'Golden Medical Discovery' as well. It took several bottles, but I was completely restored to good health and since that time when I have felt the need of these medicines I have taken them and always with perfect satisfaction."—Mrs. Wm. Baker, 32 Page St.

Stratford, Ont.—I was all run down, weak, nervous. I also suffered with severe pains through my back. I was very miserable when a friend advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and one bottle seemed to give renewed strength. It stopped the pain in my back, also helped my nervous condition. It is surely a good tonic for women.—Mrs. Florence Cullum, 100 Milton St.

who control these products at their sources. Although these articles cost more than they should, the ordinary storekeeper and so-called middleman has to pay them in the course of doing business. They in turn include them in the cost of the goods they sell. This makes it seem as though they were charging too much for their services. When, however, they are accused of making excessive profits it is easy for them, like the fruit retailer, milk dealer and coal merchants already mentioned, to prove their innocence. Who, then, are the grafters in cases such as these? So far, however, only a small part of the tale has been told.

THE MONOPOLY OF LAND.

Probably the greatest burden the common people are forced to carry is caused by the world-wide monopoly of land for private purposes. Fifty years ago, when farmers used to drive into the nearby town or city and sell their products direct to the consumers, the land values in these towns and cities were small. They had not become the burden on the public they now constitute. Since then land values all over the continent have increased by hundreds of billions of dollars. Nobody has seemed to realize that somebody was paying for these enormously increased land values, yet such has been the case. It has been the public. In the city of Toronto alone during the four years from 1912 to 1915 inclusive land values increased $160,000,000, or by an average of $40,239,95) a year. So misled are the public in matters of this kind that increasing land values are looked on as a sign of increasing prosperity instead of a an infallible sign that the owners of land are being given increased power to tax the common people.

Let us see once more how this matter works out. Child's Restaurant on Yonge Street, Toronto, pays $28,000 a year rental for their store and the land on which it is situated. Supposing $5,000 represents the value of the rent of the store, it leaves $23,000 as the rental of the small piece of land which God created for the use of the people at large, but which individuals have seized for their own profit. The owner of this restaurant must procure this $23,000 from somewhere. He does so by paying the farmers less for the cheese, butter, eggs and milk he purchases from them and by charging the city consumer as much for these articles as he can secure. Thus of the produce of the farm handled by this one restaurant keeper $20,000 is directly added to their cost by him in order that he may pay his rent. The restaurant keeper has to hustle to make ends meet. The man who owns the land does not need to do anything but collect the $28,000 rental through his agent and live happily on the proceeds. Yet the public is apt to conclude that the real culprit is the middle man, in the form of the restaurant keeper.

But again the tale does not end here. The restaurant keeper must pay wages to his help that are high enough to enable them to pay the high rentals they are charged in their own homes. All the firms from whom he buys his supplies are operating on similar high priced land and are charging the rentals into the cost of their goods. The firms which sell boots, clothing, furniture, and other supplies add their rentals on to the cost of the goods and the employees of the restaurant keeper demand wages from him that will enable them to buy these goods that have these high rental charges included in their costs. Thus the very wages the restaurant keeper and butcher pay include concealed rental charges.

There are thousands of city residents who pay one-quarter to one-third of all they earn to the landlord directly in the form of rent. Indirectly they pay 15 per cent. to 25 per cent. more of all they earn to the landlords of their butchers, grocers, and others in the cost of the goods purchased from them. Multiply the case of the Yonge Street merchant mentioned by all the stores and manufacturing establishments in Toronto and we obtain a glimpse of the enormous burden the public pays to the people who monopolize the land and who make them pay the bills in the form of excessive rentals. Here, then, again, is where much of the difference lies between what the farmer obtains for his goods and what the city consumer pays. From time to time, as we read of land values in our towns and cities having been increased by a few million dollars, we should bear in mind that it means that before long there will be another increase in the cost of doing business as well as of living.

Trusts and Combines.

These are days when we hear much about trusts and combines. Yet it not infrequently happens that those people who are the loudest in denouncing such combinations of capital are unconsciously the staunchest upholders of laws which make these trusts and combines possible. Aside from the monopoly of natural resources the vast majority of the trusts and combines of the country are possible only because of our high tariff walls. So far has this principle been carried that an investigation of any highly protected industry is almost certain to reveal that anywhere from 90 to 100 per cent. of its products are controlled by one or two groups of men who regulate the production and manipulate the prices in ways that will ensure their receiving a maximum profit regardless of the welfare of the public at large. During the past twenty years hundreds of small firms in Canada have been crowded out of business by their larger competitors with the result that the country is now dominated by small groups of often immensely wealthy firms. So far has this been carried that as long ago as 1911 Mr. J. J. Harpell, in his book, Canadian National Economy, showed that whereas in 1891 there were 5,386 firms in Canada manufacturing boots and shoes, by 1906 there were only 138; whereas in 1891 there were 357 firms making carpets, by 1906 there were only 5; whereas in 1891 there were 1,567 firms making harness and saddlery, by 1906 there were only 182. Similar figures could be quoted in almost all lines of industry. The cement combine in Canada provides one of the best known examples of how supply has been reduced and the price of the product increased to the limit allowed by the tariff soar to just meet the competition of goods from abroad. Statements made in the House of Commons have shown that millions of dollars of watered stock have been disposed of in connection with this one industry.

The restaurant keeper and the butcher have to meet the increased expenses of doing business which is caused by these conditions. The cost of the furniture in their stores, the cement and other articles used in their buildings, the clothes their employees have to wear, the taxes they pay are all increased by tariff laws and the trusts and combines they foster. They in turn add their costs to the price of the goods they sell. Here, again, is where the public pays the piper. It is because they do not realize how they do it that they are apt to unite in accusing the middlemen of being grafters, although these men often are themselves being squeezed by the very conditions of which the public complains.

Watered Stock Combines.

The powers enjoyed by the financial magnates who control the natural resources and industries of the country, as described in the three classes to which reference has been made, have in many instances, enabled them to declare such enormous profits that they have been led to water their stock to the extent of millions of dollars. In many cases this has been done for the sole purpose of disguising the size of their profits, while in other cases their object has been to make large profits quickly by selling but paper to innocent private investors. In both cases, however, the burden on the public remains the same. Railway corporations because of their special rights of way, have not hesitated to adopt this policy on a lavish scale. The public pays the bills in the form of increased freight and passenger fares and the cost of the goods it buys which are hauled over the railways.

The Situation's Difficulties.

Enough has been said, I trust, to show how complicated is the situation as well as into whose pockets much of the money which the public pays for the goods it needs ultimately finds its way. It indicates, also, why it is that Hon. T. A. Crerar, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, with all his good intentions, is likely to find it a most difficult undertaking to do anything really effective—as long as our national laws remain as they are—to carry out his announced intention of reducing the prices charged by the so-called middlemen. As these charges are based on the inflated costs of the hundred and one things they must buy and use in the course of their business, their charges for their services cannot be reduced to any considerable extent until some means is found of reducing the cost to them of their supplies, rentals, the wages they pay their help, as well as of their many other expenditures. Until methods of doing this have been discovered, any lasting improvement in existing conditions need not be expected. Even although the Government seizes the surplus profits of many other firms like the Wm. Davies Co., Ltd., the real causes of existing conditions will continue untouched.

What Shall We Do About It?

The purpose of this article is to reveal conditions, not to suggest remedies. Yet it would hardly do not to at least refer to a few simple, much-needed reforms. For the monopolists who operate behind high tariff walls the only thing to be done is to reduce or remove the tariff. There would be a fearful howl about ruining home industries, in which many people who are complaining about the high cost of living would join, but the results would not be nearly as disastrous as those who are profiting from existing conditions would like to lead us to believe.

The best remedy for the conditions that have grown out of the monopoly of the natural resources of the country, such as our oil and steel mines, water powers and land, is to tax them according to their value. This could be determined in the case of mines by requiring those who control them to set their own values upon them. The Government could reserve the privilege of purchasing them or permitting others to purchase them at a 10 or 15 per cent. advance on the valuation set. Such a tax, if heavy enough, would necssitate the owners of these properties working them to their full advantage. This would increase the available supply of coal, oil and other similar necessities and thereby lower prices. It would, also, ensure the public receiving its full share of the community values which these natural resources represent. By forcing idle city land values and thus reduce rentals. purposes, into use, it would lower values and thus reduce rentals.

The organized farmers of Canada, through their provincial organizations and the Canadian Council of Agriculture, are standing squarely on the foregoing platform. In the farmers' movement more than in any other now seeking public support, lies hope for the accomplishment of fundamental reforms that will vitally affect the welfare of every citizen of Canada. Our farmers should rally around their leaders in earnestly contending for these reforms.

Germans Said To Have Rejected Russian Terms

Bolsheviki Delegation Recalled to Petrograd According to Unofficial Report---Russian Requests Included Withdrawal of the Germans From Occupied Islands in Gulf of Riga---Nothing to Report From the British Front in France.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, December 21.—An Exchange Telegraph despatch to-day from Petrograd asserted it was unofficially reported that the Germans had refused the Russian peace terms and that the Bolsheviki delegation had been recalled to Petrograd.

The decision, if accurately reported, does not mean the resumption of hostilities on the Russian front at once, as a complete stoppage of all fighting for a month has already been agreed upon by the terms of the armistice.

If the Germans have refused to agree to the Bolsheviki terms, it was believed here they did so in full consciousness of their strength with which to extort enormous concessions from the Russians. The original Bolsheviki requests were for the German withdrawal from the occupied islands in Riga Bay and the relinquishment of other Russian territory held by the Teutons.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

PETROGRAD, December 21. — The text of a secret Russo-Japanese treaty dated March 31, 1916, provided for an offensive alliance of those two powers against any other power attempting political supremacy in China, was made public by the Workmen's and Soldiers' Soviet to-day.

The statement said it was believed this act referred to the United States.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 21.—It is reported unofficially that the Germans have rejected the Russian peace terms, Petrograd correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co. wires under date of Thursday.

(Special to the Toronto Star and the Peterborough Examiner).

AMSTERDAM December 21.—An Austro-Hungarian delegation, representing all branches of the government, and headed by an officer of the Foreign Office, Dr. Von Hempel, left for Petrograd yesterday to arrange further armistice details, a despatch from Vienna stated to-day. They will meet a commission of Russians.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, December 21.—Field Marshal Haig had "nothing special" to report from the front to-day.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PARIS, December 21.—Active artillery fighting on the Verdun front east of the Meuse, is reported by the War Office. Artillery is active also at points on the eastern end of the line, especially in the vicinity of Hartmannsweilerkopf, and east of Thann.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, Thursday.—The British War Office to-night issued the following statement of aviation activities in France: Three hostile machines were brought down in air fighting Wednesday, and two others were driven down out of control. One of our machines is missing.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

AMSTERDAM, December 21.—Quartermaster-General Ludendorff has requested journalists on the German west front "not to write too much regarding peace," according to reports reaching here to-day. Ludendorff, it was declared, stated that "only victory could bring peace that was certain would come."

WHO WILL HELP?

A plea for money to furnish the new rooms over th eRoyal Bank of Canada for the returned soldiers. If the families who are having a comfortable dinner in their own cosy homes this Christmas (homes) that have been kept for them by the maimed, ill and returned men, as well as by all men who left to cross the sea to fight our battles for us, would give 10 cents, 25c cents, or what they can afford, or indeed what costs a little sacrifice, they would give pleasure to the Great War Veterans, and save a weary canvas of the city at this busy time of the year.

We have promised to do our best to open the rooms for New Year's Day.—Ethel Fessenden.

BOURASSA ON RESULT

Special to The Toronto Star and Peterborough Examiner.

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 21.—"The victory of the Government is real and significant," says Henri Bourassa, in an editorial in last night's Le Devoir, the first he has written in several weeks.

"It would be silly," he says, "to pretend that the [illegible] (The Soldiers' vote, etc.) are sufficient of themselves to explain the extent of the Unionist victor. The enormous Unionist majorities in Ontario and the West prove that the government would have succeeded even had it appealed to the electoral body as constituted before the adoption of the hateful acts of exception passed last session. The victory proves that the majority in English Canada want to keep the Unionist Cabinet in power and approve on the whole its policy.

"But it is going a long way to pretend that the vote of Monday is equivalent to a formal approval by referendum of conscription or that it means in more general terms that the people wish to carry on the war, effectively without let up or limit.

"No line of demarcation has been traced between those who are in favour of the war to a finish, and those who wish to limit the destructive effort.

"In repeating everywhere that the 'Liberal party is for war to the end' Mr. Laurier and his principal lieutenants have left no issue to those Canadians who think it more patriotic to save Canada from ruin and suicide than to bleed it white without profit to the allies.

"In announcing everywhere that the sons of farmers will be exempted from military service and the second-class of conscripts will not be called up, the government assured for itself the support of a large number of anti-conscriptionists. So it is absolutely false to argue that the government's majority is equivalent to a referendum in favour of conscription."

Stating that the more turbulent element in the Unionist party wants to drive the Government to measures of reprisal against Quebec, Bourassa says he likes to believe that the more solid heads of the Cabinet, Messrs. Borden and Doherty, will not allow themselves to be carried along by the hot-heads of the party.

BOLSHEVIKI ARE PLANNING TO FORM A NEW ASSEMBLY

Are in a Minority in the Constituent Assembly and So in Conjunction With the Trotsky-Lenine Ring They Are Going to Have One of Their Own

URITSKY'S STATEMENT

(By Joseph Shapten.)

STOCKHOLM, Dec. 21.—The Bolsheviki are preparing a rump convention all their own to replace the constituent assembly where they are in a minority, according to word received here to-day from Petrograd. The Swedish Maximalist leader, Dr. Heglund, wired to-day the substance of an interview which he had with M. Uritsky, a prominent Bolsheviki, in Petrograd. Uritsky he said, denied that the final result of the Russian constituent assembly elections had become known. He declared the assembly would be opened within five or six days and predicted the likelihood of the democratic parties therein splitting with the left or Bolsheviki wing. The Bolsheviki, it was asserted, would then form an assembly of their own, in conjunction with the Trotsky-Lenine ring. Uritsky was quoted as declaring the Bolsheviki might not even appear in the assembly, on account of their minority there. The government was understood to be considering anew the question of dissolving the whole assembly.

"The question is very complicated," Heglund wired. "It is impossible to foretell the outcome."

CHRISTMAS AT FRONT

British Tommies and American Sammies Are Preparing to Celebrate the Holidays Together if the Circumstances Permit

A WELCOME LULL

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, Dec. 21.— For the first time in history, British Tommies and American Sammies will celebrate Christmas together.

Arrangements were being completed to-day for a whole series of mutual holiday "shindigs" and "blowouts," circumstances permitting. The Americans are widely scattered, making gatherings difficult, and in some cases impossible, but some sort of a celebration is to be held wherever the Tommies and Sammies have a chance to meet.

British fighting men, like the Americans, have their gifts from home delivered even to dugouts and to their shell hole homes on the very first line.

Oranges, candies, cigarettes, razors, games and other things which British home folks have learned from other war Christmases, are the sort of gifts which the Empire's fighting men most want, constitute the bulk of the Tommies' presents.

Back behind the lines in ruined villages and camps, concerts and special vaudeville performances have been arranged as part of the British army's celebration of the birth of the Prince of Peace. Special dinners are being prepared.

Incidentally, a canvass of the Tommies by their commanding officers, to find out just what sort of "eats" they wanted for this Christmas spread, has developed some freakish appetites.

One captain asked his men whether they wanted turkey or pork and beans, the latter piping hot, with strips of bacon browned on the top. The pork and beans won hands down in the subsequent vote.

There will be no fraternizing on the British front. That much is certain.

Christmas day in the trenches will be just like any other war day, dependent upon developments.

To-day all the front was decorated in a mantle of snow a foot deep. There has seldom been a more quiet landscape in the war zone than the one seen all along the line. The sky was blue and there was a stinging nip in the air. Occasional outpost affairs were reported, with some sniping, the latter due to the fact that human targets silhouette perfectly against the white background of snow. Spasmodic shelling continued to-day. Up above the airmen were on the go regardless of the lull on earth.

The Weekly Crop Report

The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued the following weekly report on farm conditions:

The heavy snowfalls of the past week or more have given good protection to clover fields, and to the newly sown wheat and rye, which latter crops have rather too small a top for hard wintering.

There is an increased demand for hay and coarse grains owing to the comparative scarcity of ensilage. The large yield of straw is coming in nicely for bulking the ration for live stock. There is an increased demand for brood sows, especially for pedigreed animals.

Milk production is about holding its own, depending more than ever upon individual handl of the dairy herd.

The dairy industry is opening up in the Rainy River District. A butter factory started during the season and is said to have done much better than if making cheese.

Apples range in price from $5.50 to $9 per barrel, according to variety, quality, and selection. The Norfolk Fruit Growers' Association are selling their pack by both wholesale and retail methods.

Sleighing is of mid-winter quality, and will facilitate marketing, the drawing of mill feeds, logging and other winter work, for which there is generally speaking, a sufficiency of labour.

GREAT BRITAIN IN ACCORD WITH WILSON'S WAR AIMS

ROYAL FAMILY TO BE ALLOWED TO LEAVE

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

PETROGRAD, via London, December 21. — Former Czar Nicholas and his family are to be permitted to seek a haven in some other country than Russia.

It was authoritatively stated to-day that a decree would be issued Thursday allowing members of the imperial family "including those at Tobolsk" to "go abroad" in compliance with their request. This action of the Bolsheviki is due to the insistence of the Germans in the armistice negotiations. The German negotiations, it is stated, had raised the question of the disposition of the former members of royalty at Brest-Litovsk. The Bolsheviki leaders asked the opinion of the Grand Duke Nicholas Mikhallovitch and Paul Anexandrovitch, who suggested that all members of the royal family be allowed to leave.

JAPAN ANXIOUS TO OCCUPY SIBERIA TO HIT AT HUNS

PACT IS PUBLISHED

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—Japan is anxious to strike at Germany by occupying Siberia, according to advices reaching here to-day. This information, coupled with the Russian publication of an alleged Russo-Japanese agreement to pounce on any nation attempting supremacy in China, created a profound impression in official and diplomatic quarters.

Some allied diplomats were said to favour the Siberian move in view of the possibility of Teuton denomination of all the Russians, even the east. They pointed out that the American Consul had said there is need for troops at that port.

Confirmation of the Russo-Japanese pact was not immediately obtainable here. However, it was stated that in so far as China is now concerned, the Japanese are discouraging big military preparations in that nation and that official feelers have been put forward with a view to American-Japanese cooperation in China's military, economic and financial problems. President Wilson, it was suggested, will be the determining factor in the decision as to whether Japanese troops shall invest Vladivostok, provided that is the actual wish of Japan as reported.

AN INSULT TO SIR WILFRID LAURIER LE CANADA SAYS

French-Canadian Paper Says Suggestion That He Should Be Taken Into the Cabinet is Cynicism of the Most Revolting Type

LEMIEUX'S POSITION

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—"Le Canada" is not enamoured of the suggestion to take Sir Wilfrid Laurier into the Unionist Cabinet. It blames Lord Athelstane of the Star for yesterday's editorial in the Herald, and says that it is a very poor pretext to say that French Canadians need representation in the Cabinet.

"The French Canadian element had two representatives in the Ministry and they have repudiated them," says Le Canada.

"Behold to-day a one-time Liberal paper insults Sir Wilfrid Laurier by presenting him as the successor of a Blondin or a Sevigny. Truly this surpasses all bounds.

"See here, Lord Athelstane, a little decency."

"How could Sir Wilfrid Laurier compromise with those who have united to crush him and the popular ideals? How could Sir Wilfrid Laurier, a man of integrity and of unsullied reputation, make common cause with the authors of the Conscription law, the closure, the C.N.R. boodle, and above all, the originators of the odious, infamous Election Act, which has permitted the Union to steal as many constituencies as possible? To make such a proposition is cynicism of the most revolting type."

Hon. R. Lemieux has been mentioned as a Cabinet Minister. Le Canada quotes him as follows:

"I have been elected as a Liberal Oppositionist and such will I be today and to-morrow. Even though I were offered the most important posts in the Union Cabinet, I should always refuse. I shall remain with my Chief, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. As the Opposition, we can accomplish more than if we were in power, because the economic problems we will have to deal with will be appalling."

S. J. Jacobs, K.C., the second Hebrew to be elected to a Dominion House, also denies that he would join with the Unionists if asked.

New York Has A Great Dark Way

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

NEW YORK, N.Y., Dec. 21.— The "great dark way" is a reality to-day. In response to Fuel Administrator Garfield's lightless night order, Broadway was illuminated last night only by street lamps. Many big signs continued to blaze Sunday night, the first "lightless night," but all signs, even those of restaurants and theatres, were dark last night.

THE GERMAN COLONIES

(By Lowell Mellett.)

LONDON, Dec. 21. —Great Britain is in full accord with President Wilson's outline of war aims that the fight of the world's democracies toward victory is not toward the realization of selfish desires.

Britain seeks no territorial extension, except that which an international conference agrees is necessary for future security.

The United Press is in a position to state to-day that Lloyd George's pledges are those developed by practically the unanimous views of all government circles. Of all the ringing utterances of the Premier in his war aims speech of yesterday, including the demand of restoration and compensation for invaded territories, those which, in effect, pledged adherence to President Wilson's announcement that nationalities should be permitted to work out their own destinies were regarded here to-day as most striking.

In thus putting England's cards on the table, the United Press is able to present this outline of Great Britain's position, from various high sources, following the Prime Minister's revolutionary announcement of England's colonial policy. While the German colonies are regarded as non-returnable, because the peace conference must consider the future security of the of the British Union of South Africa, yet Britain actually is not desirous of further territory thers. She demands only the elimination of the standing menace of German military outposts. She is also not in sympathy with the imperialistic demands attributed to minorities in other allied countries. She agrees that certain territorial readjustments are necessary, but only for the purpose of guaranteeing further security.

ALSACE LORRAINE.

Regarding Alsace Lorraine, England holds that if the Germanized portion of Lorraine desires to remain German, that section should be allowed to remain German territory. But the British Empire holds that the greater part of Lorraine, as well as all of Alsace, unmistakably belongs to France. In the Balkans, the adjustment of territorial boundaries is held by Great Britain to be a problem for the decision of an international peace body, but with adherence to President Wilson's principle of lines of nations to be drawn on the basis of nationality of the peoples thereof. It is fit that the Balkan countries could never come to an agreement among themselves. An actual return of Italia Irredentia is supported by Britain, including Trieste and Trentino. But England cannot support Italian claims for Dalmatia and other territory of this character.

POLAND'S CASE.

Poland, in the British view, is to be permitted to work out her own destinies, but the same right must be accorded Courland and Lithuania. As to President Wilson's views as to a commercial war on Germany after the armed war, there is general belief in British official circles that nature will take care of this, but certainly, it was pointed out, the twenty-one nations of the world, now opposed to Germany will not be willing to resume business relations with the enemy, but full separation after relinquishment is the policy insisted upon. The British government, it was held, endorses fully the recent declarations on this point by the British Labour party, the extreme Liberals of British politics. The Labour party's full war aims as to restorations of land and investigations of cruelties on land and sea is endorsed by British officialdom.

There is general approval of the plan for a protectorate of Christian powers over the Holy Land henceforth.

SLIGHTLY COMPLICATED.

Another indication that "the programe of the Union government will be worth watching, is the promise of Hon. A. L. Sifton, of a "non-partizan policy of immigration and colonization for western Canada."

It is to be assumed that among the inducements—in addition to cheap and fertile farms, and the blessings and privileges of British institutions—there will be a guarantee that the rights and privileges of British citizenship implied in the naturalizatio contract, will not be taken away; that the naturalization pledge will not again be made a "scrap of paper" in the interests of winning an election. Does it not seem that Prussian malafides and disregard of solemn obligations, such as has been practiced, will require a good deal of explaining away in order to encourage foreigners to take advantage of the "non-partizan immigration policy," by a government, which as far as the west is concerned, owes its existence to a most un-British breach of faith with its foreign-born citizens? By the way, what will be the status of disfranchised and ostracized British subjects of foreign birth in the Canadian North-west after this? Will they be re-naturalized or adopted? Does it not seem to the Liberal statesman election device, designed to save the face of the partizan Borden government, will for a long time be a complicating element in the problem of settling the vast undeveloped areas of the Canadian West?

Give early attention to your selection of aldermen and Christmas presents.

SENATE REFORM (?)

The Globe is, at least, optimistic in regarding the possibilty of Senate reform, as "one of the by-products of Union government." It says, "the appointment of men to the Senate for life is a denial of democracy and responsible government."

This may be true, but when the evil of this "denial" is aggravated by its abuse, it becomes a more serious matter. The head of the Union government has been, and still is, an offender. While he was in consultation with himself as to the formation of a non-partizan "union" government, he perpetrated a big "denial of democracy." He made about a score of partizan appointments to the Senate, shelving in the somnolent and well-paid seclusion of the Senate, his own supporters who were afraid to face the music of a general election, as supporters of the Borden government. Sir Robert thus got a great "head start" of his prospective Grit colleagues in the non-partizan Union government he was getting organized. He proved that non-partizanship was not to be allowed to interfere with partizan reward of his partizan followers.

When the Union government was formed we were assured that partizanship was dead; partyism had perished from the land, and hereafter only merit could count in securing government appointments, and that Grits would have an equal chance with Tories. But the Union government is no better in this regard than Sir Robert was in exercising his moribund power to load up the Senate with his partizans. He evidently forgot that there was one vacancy he had neglected to fill; and since the Union government was so overwhelmingly elected that it could afford to do the right thing, another Borden partizan has been hoisted into the Senate, in the person of Mr. W. S. Middlebro, ex-M.P., North Grey, who had qualified for recognition by a non-partizan government, by a record of faithful, if not servile, support of the Borden government.

It does seem that after Sir Robert

rupt abuse of power in loading the Senate with his partizans, the Union government might have found a poor lone Grit, worthy of being buried alive in the Senate, as a triing evidence of its non-partizon character.

Now the banks are asking for exemption from the application of the Military Service Act.

THE THREE GREAT POWERS.

In his induction address, as principal of Upper Canada College, Major Grant struck, among others, this high note:

"We have got to have in Canada, as I believe they are having in England, a new concordat between the three great powers—capital, labour and government—and labour must have a greater part than ever before. I very much hope that we may not turn out common-place thinking individuals, with no care for other than themselves. We here in Canada must learn sacrifice and war, if we are to solve the problems that lie before us. Where can one learn better than in a great public school such as this?"

Here we have a new grouping of things that count; a new declaration of relative merit and importance. Major Grant brackets together in his newer act of regard, capital, labour and government.

That is not the old way—the old way, the old point of practical regard was, and still is, to put capital and government first, and labour a distant second—a side issue—if it is even regarded as an issue at all—a secondary consideration; in the language of the turf, an "also ran."

This is and has been the attitude of practical politicians. When Sir Robert Borden formed the Union government he adhered to the old point of view—he provided representative recognition of everything but labour—in a real sense. He saw to it that capital and capitalistic dominance were represented in the person of Sir Thomas White, Finance Minister, the creation, if not the creature, of the big financial, the capitalistic, interests. He saw that the Liberals were represented—not too liberally, however. But Labour, which Major Grant puts on an equality with capital, was virtually not represented at all. It cannot be conceded that a Senator, only nominally affiliated with Labour, made a minister-at-large, without portfolio, and the retention of a moribund Minister of Labour warmed-over from the old moribund government, met the right of Labour to approximately fair and equal representation.

Sir Robert Borden promised, if his "Union" government were sustained, that he would give Labour a practical representative in a Cabinet position. But that is only a promise; and at the hands of governments Labour has not grown as fat on government promises as Capital has waxed fat on Government performance.

But we cannot altogether blame the government. Governments are human, and naturally are inclined to defer to the source from whence come the sinews of war. Capital swings its money bags threateningly about the heads of governments, but Labour too often fails to make its voice heard except in feeble and spasmodic protest; too often neutralized by divided action at the polls.

Labour is organized for the protection of it material interests, but it cannot be said to have the semblance of an organization as one of Major Grant's "three great powers"—capital, labour and government."

Labour has been so long the prey, sport, the hewers of wood and drawers of water, for capital and governments, that meek submission to subjection to the influence of its exploitation, seems to have become a habit.

This habit will have to be overcome if we are to have as a result of the war; of the wide-spread revolution of of ideals, outlook and ambition, a "new concordat" between the real essential elements of human society.

If a "new concordat" is arranged as far as Labour is concerned it will be vain and useless to look for help to the initiative of government. Labour itself will have to take the lead and present a solid front—not broken and divided ranks.

Boys' Coats Are Wanted

Who Will Help the Children at the Shelter?

In connection with the children at the Children's Aid Shelter, who are dependent upon the people of Peterborough for their Christmas cheer, it may be mentioned that there are three or four boys, around the age of ten years, for whom overcoats are badly needed.

There must be good coats in many homes in the city which the original owners have outgrown, and these would be very much appreciated.

Tobacco Industry Affected

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 21.—Decisions being given by the exemption appeal tribunals will really affect the tobacco industry of this district. Sons of tobacco farmers are not being granted freedom from military service and as a result many thousand acres of tobacco land will not be cultivated next spring owing to the shortage of help.

A Merry Christmas And Happy New Year

The Ladies of the Nurses' Supervision Committee of the Peterborough Health Association, wish to extend the Season's Greetings to the City Council and Citizens of Peterborough, and to express their thanks for the kindly assistance given them during the year, which is drawing to a close. Notwithstanding the many claims of the war the barrel of meal has not wasted, nor the cruse of oil failed, and we have been enabled to supply the usual nourishment and medicine to our tubercular and other patients. Even with fresh eggs soaring at seventy cents a dozen, and very scarce, we have so far supplied them where necessary to every patient. For this and other mercies we are very grateful and are pleased to report a decided improvement in the condition of most of the patients visited by our District Nurse. We also wish to thank the City Physicians for their advice and assistance, especially Drs. Nesi and Cameron, who have freely given so much time and assistance to the Committee. We are looking forward to meeting a large number of our friends at our Annual At Home to be held at the Empress Hotel on Friday afternoon, December 28th. The proceeds this year of the At Home is to be devoted to paying for a little girl with club feet, who is being treated with great success at the Sick Children's Hospital, Toronto. This child's father has been fighting in France, and for this reason the child has a double claim on our practical sympathy. Please watch Saturday's papers and keep the date open, as we are anxious to meet our many friends again this year.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I see by a press report that Mr. Hoover, the United States' Food Administrator, has worked out an elaborate scheme for reducing the price of bread. All bakers will be placed under government license and the making of loaves will be standardized as to ingredients and weight, and rolls will only be permitted if made in standard sizes and of regulative bread dough. The prices are fixed, but it is expected that, with the amplification of distribution, natural competition will materially reduce prices. Only four sizes of loaves will be permitted, one pound, one and a half, two and four pounds. The loaves must have a crease in the middle, to allow of their being sold in halves. Grocers are advised to make lower prices to customers who pay cash and carry home their purchases. Mr. Hoover claims that under the cash and carry system, bread can be sold at a profit of one cent for a pound loaf. He says that the cost of distribution from the wholesale bakers to the homes of consumers is thirty-three per cent of the cost of bread, or three cents a pound at present prices. He also asks "why should not the cash and carry system be applied to other things besides bread?" He ridicules the idea of employing a horse and cart and man to take home the most trumpery purchases, and makes many other valuable suggestions.

If our Rip Van Hanna cannot devise some scheme whereby the high cost of living can be reduced, why does he not take a leaf out of the book of Mr. Hoover, so that he may be useful as well as ornamental?

Yours truly,
ECONOMY.

Dec. 21st, 1917.

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—Allow me a small space in your paper in regard to the election of 17th December last. I was around the city streets nearly all day Monday, also in the evening, and I was horrified at the way the women were arguing and rejoicing over the election, all because they were allowed a vote to help Sir Robert Borden. Mr. Borden was very clever when he gave the women a vote, as he knew they would mostly all help him. I think by all appearances the majority of these women want to get their husbands over to the trenches. Then they will realise what they have done, in a few years. I think if my wife went to such extremes as to take off her hat and shout and cheer and say, "Hurrah for Burnham, Hurrah for Borden; they're the men we want," I would put on the khaki and never stop till I reached the trenches, with the hope not to return until she would realise how to appreciate me at home.

Now, when they are so interested in men's affairs, I wonder they don't take off their dresses and put on the khaki and do their bit to win the war. Now, I want the reader to bear in mind I am not referring to all the women who had a vote, as there were some who went down and marked their ballot and came home again and attended to their household duties, and still they were as interested in the election as any woman should be. I hope I have not offended anybody for stating my opinion on this subject. Thanking you for your valuable space.—Yours, A Reader.

E. M. Elliott On The Good Roads Policy At Farmers' Meeting

County Clerk Ed. M. Elliott of Peterborough lead in the discussion of the good roads question at the meeting of the United Farmers of Ontario in Toronto, yesterday.

"Ninety per cent. of the traffic on leading rural highways in our county is urban and only ten per cent. rural," said Mr. Elliott. "Yet rural sections pay sixty per cent. of the cost of construction and eighty per cent. of the cost of maintenance under a county road scheme. It is said that form values are increased by good roads, but this applies in our county to only one-tenth of the farms. For this reason urban centres should bear more of the cost of leading roads than they do now."

Mr. A. A. Powers, Reeve of Clarke Township, in speaking of the eastern extension of the Provincial highway, said that thirty per cent. of the cost in that case was to be borne by local municipalities, and seventy per cent. by the Province. "The share of the Province will," Mr. Powers said, "be charged to capital account, and auto license fees, received by the Province, will meet the carrying charges. The share of the municipalities will have to be met out of general taxation. That road is in such excellent shape to-day, before being taken over by the Province, that I have been able to haul double the load over that I could haul over the ordinary roads of the township. Yet that road is to be rebuilt, at an enormous expense, for the benefit of auto traffic. It is a burning shame to levy thirty per cent. of the cost in such case on the townships. If motorists want a special class of roads for themselves, they should be compelled to pay for the same".

Even now it is not too late to make gingered apples.

PRINCELY PAYMENTS TO HOLD MR. ARMOUR.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—At the Federal Trade Commission investigation of the Chicago Stock Yards here, F. R. Hart, one of the principal figures in the Stock Yards Company testified that it had been agreed to pay J. Ogden Armour all the company's earnings over nine per cent. to keep Armour from moving the yards away from Chicago and further west.

Encouraging Reports Read At Horticultural Society's Annual Meeting Held Last Night

The Horticultural Society's reports read at the annual meeting last night indicated that it is more than marking time in spite of the demands and deterrent conditions created by the war. The membership was reduced to 288 during the year, but there were many evidences that horticulture has made more progress among the citizens than is represented by membership in the Society. However, it is felt that with renewed support from the public, greater results can be accomplished in the beautification of the city by fostering among the property owners a taste for flowers and well kept lawns.

The report of the secretary-treasurer Mr. Cecil Williamson, showed a balance of $4.74, with receipts of $650.71; and the Park Board received $885.69 with a present balance of $10.65.

The president's report, presented by Mr. Walter Stocker, reviewed the 1917 work and touched upon a few of the problems, especially in the securing of imported stock, that are growing out of war conditions. The report follows:

"The season just closed has been one which, as a society of this character, has been very successful. It is true our membership is lower than last season, which was the highest in the history of the Peterborough Horticultural Society, but I feel quite sure that even last year's figures would have been exceeded had we have had a canvasser to take members' subscriptions in the spring. This, I feel, should be arranged for another year. A choice of some thirty options were given this year's members during the spring season, with the usual Dutch bulbs it will be necessary to procure Daffodils and 6 Narcissus, were distributed this fall. Owing to the greatly increased cost of importing these bulbs it will be necessary to procure a substitute for these next fall or perhaps arrange for one delivery of options only until after the close of the present war. Bulbs this season were very late in arriving, causing much disappointment to many members who desired to have some in bloom for Christmas.

"The annual lawn and garden competition was held as usual this season and was highly successful, being greatly aided by the additional cash prizes donated by Messrs. Kennedy, Howard and myself. Mr. Adams, this season's judge, has kindly donated a silver cup to be awarded in this competition next season as your Board of Directors see fit. The looking after the two central parks was awarded by contract for the season to Messrs. Wise and Ford, who performed their duties in a satisfactory manner, and same has been properly cleaned up and put in shape for the winter.

Owing to the death of one of your Directors and the removal from the city of another it will be necessary to fill these vacancies. The faithful and very valuable assistance of the late Mr. Hay will be greatly missed from our meetings."

On a motion by Mr. R. H. Parsons, seconded by Mr. E. Brunwell, the secretary was instructed to write Mr. Adams, acknowledging the receipt of his trophy and thanking him for it. At the January meeting its disposal will be considered.

The following officers were re-elected:

Pres.—Mr. W. Stocker.
1st V. P.—Mr. H. Beal.
2nd V. P.—Mr. F. Wise
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. C. Williamson.

The executive committee was re appointed, but several vacancies will be filled at the meeting next month, at which it is hopd there will be a large attendance.

YOUR XMAS GIFT TO BELGIUM

In planning our own festivities, we will show a poor sort of gratitude, if we do not think of the little children of Belgium.

Never for one moment must we forget that if Belgium had not stood in the breach in the early days of the war, France, Great Britain—Canada—would not be enjoying her present security and prosperity.

Germany planned to drive straight over Belgium and on to Paris. Belgium replied: 'This is a country, not a road,' and her soldiers died checking the Hun.

To-day the widows and orphans of these same soldiers are starving in Belgium, while we live in plenty. It is a debt we owe to Belgium to take care of her stricken children, and at no time does this debt press more heavily than now, when we are preparing to celebrate Christmas.

Remember that the Belgian children plead not for toys or luxuries, but for a little food to eat.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS FROM OVERSEAS MEN

There are unmistakable evidences that more than a few citizens have answered the impulse aroused by circular letters His Majesty's mail has delivered from Montreal liquor shops, and have secured supplies of "Christmas cheer," which they have stowed away in cellars and cellarets.

In some cases the domestic stock will likely be exhausted before the holidays arrive. Apparently friends have already been invited to partake of the "cheer" that is bottled in Montreal, and unless some of the guests are cautious in their cups they will be easy picking for the police in their homeward journeys from the friendly oases that are temporarily flowing with old "tanglefoot." If the business from the east is maintained in its present wave, the railways will have to put on special liquor express trains similar to the milk deliveries that are now commonplace.

It is sad, but apparently true, that the express cars might now carry cargoes on both east and west trips—milk to Montreal and Birks or Old Mull to the ineffectually arid territories west of the Ottawa River.

PRIZES AND DIPLOMAS PRESENTED TO PUPILS

HAS A FINE RECORD

At the Commencement Exercises of St. Peter's School, held last night, in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum, His Lordship Bishop O'Brien presented the diplomas and prizes won by the various pupils of St. Peter's and of the various Separate Schools.

The entertainment proved an unusually successful event, and was attended by scores of interested friends and relatives of the students.

AN UNUSUAL RECORD.

For the fourth consecutive year the scholarship for highest marks in the Entrance examinations was obtained by a student of St. Peter's, Master Bertie Giroux, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Giroux, being the successful competitor this year. The lad not only succeeded in obtaining the highest marks in the city, but of the county, and though it cannot be definitely ascertained, his marks are most probably the highest in the Province of Ontario. In recognition of his unusual accomplishment Master Giroux was presented with $30.00 from His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, and a splendid bicycle from Mr. C. R. Banks. The latter was presented by Mr. Banks, himself, who in making the presentation stated his intention of making a similar presentation each year while in business.

THE PROGRAMME.

Chorus, "Laddie in Khaki"—Boys of St. Peter's.
Violin solo—Regina Hill.
Reading—Helen Holstead.
Flag Drill—Several Small Students of St. Peter's.
Solo—Dorothy Gardiner.
Chorus—Girls of St. Peter's.
Valedictory Address — Marian Hayes.

THE DEBATE.

An interesting and well thought out debate, "Resolved that our School days are the happiest days of our lives," proved an unusually attractive feature, the arguments used on both sides proving much talent in the rising generation, all four delivering their arguments in an eloquent manner uncommon in such youthful orators.

The affirmative was taken by Vincent Kiloran and Fred Milan, the negative, Fred Shannon and Vincent O'Brien. Dean McColl, who acted as judge, expressed himself in the position of the autocratic former Emperor of Germany, who found both sides right. The children endorsed the negative heartily.

TRIBUTE TO THE SISTERS.

At the conclusion Dean McColl, the Chairman, called upon Bishop O'Brien for an address. His Lordship expressed himself proud of the splendid results obtained by the young scholars who, he stated, were a source of never-ending joy to him. He said that the splendid showing both in scholastic prowess and in deportment are due greatly to the untiring and skillful devotion of the Sisters and lay teachers.

Father O'Brien and Father Phelan also gave short congratulatory addresses to the pupils and those in charge of their education.

THE ELECTIONS REGARDED AS GREAT VICTORY FOR DEMOCRACY

Alexander McGregor, Laurier Candidate, Sees Good in the Result

Alexander MacGregor, Laurier Liberal candidate in South York, yesterday made the following interesting comment on the election result.

"A democrat, assured that a vital issue in this election was whether the people or the big interests shall rule this country, finds great comfort in the result. That solid Western contingent of 62 members in the Union Government, and the strong majority of Laurier Liberals from the Maritime Provinces, in addition to the 62 followers of Sir Wilfrid Laurier from Quebec, is an assurance that the Union Government must sincerely and efficiently fulfil its repeated pledges of helpful democratic legislation for all the people—or quit. Such representatives will tolerate homeopathic methods no longer. They mean business.

"As in the face of these great democratic gains elsewhere, Ontario has, at the worst, returned more of the democratically-minded than before, it is clear to any non-partisan observer that the centre of political control has shifted.

Gratification for Laurier.

'The followers of Sir Wilfrid Laurier have good reason for satisfaction, in view of the way the Maritime Provinces have supported him, and in view of his holding Ontario practically as she stood, in spite of the many and ill-mated forces arrayed against him in Ontario, apart entirely from Sir Wilfrid's sweep of his native Province. His triumphal tour through the West was certainly a remarkable evidence of personal devotion. To be sure, the West did not vote for him; for she had deliberately made up her mind to see that her view on tariff and other matters helpful to democracy shall prevail and had made her plans accordingly before Sir Wilfrid got there.

'I repeat that all loyal Canadians sincerely want to win the war, and that the true relation of the election to the war turned on the question of the best method of winning the war. It is clear, however, that in Ontario, in face of the many influences brought to bear there on the electors, especially the women electors, they grew quite nervous and identified the cause of Union Government with that of winning the war, and did not give the same consideration to the economic issues at stake as in the Maritime Provinces, and especially in the West.

Get Together Now.

"It is deeply to be regretted that racial and disruptive issues were raised, but it is to be hoped that the wounds thus made will soon be healed, and that all of us in Canada, without regard to Province, race or creed, will adopt, as Sir Edward Cook, in his great war pamphlet for Britain, 'Why Britain is at War,' urged his fellow-countrymen to adopt, the war motto of that great Democrat, Abraham Lincoln, whose spirit, I respectfully submit, Sir Wilfrid Laurier more fully embodies than any other Canadian statesman to-day, and says: 'With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right—let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up this nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and orphan; to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace.'

'I am deeply grateful for the loyal aid my friends have given me in the South York campaign, and a sense of their appreciation is in itself a great compensation to me."—Globe.

RUSSIAN OFFICERS TO UNITED STATES?

THEY OFFER IN A BODY TO SERVE IN AMERICAN ARMY AND FIGHT ON.

With the American Army in France Dec. 20.—The officers of the Russian army in France have volunteered as a body to give their services to the United States.

The officers are desirous of continuing the battle against the Germans, notwithstanding the Russo-German peace negotiations.

The ranking Russian officer, who made the request that he and his subordinates be taken into the American service, guaranteed to vouch for everyone accepted. All grades are included in the request from second lieutenant up.

There also have been suggestions that it might be possible to form for the Russians an organization similar to the French Foreign Legion or the Lafayette Flying Squadron.

There is a general feeling that the action of the Russian officers will have a moral effect in this country.

A Sorry Outlook For Christmas

To moderate the terrible meat shortage prevalent in the city of Brussels, and all the territory of Belgium occupied by the Germans, hog-raising farms have been opened at Luna Pare, Zuen ond Dilbeek. From 800 to 900 hogs are fed on potato peelings and other vegetable debris, gathered from the private houses of the cities. But whereas 1,000 pounds of potato peelings could be gathered per day, the shortage of potatoes has reduced the daily collection to 150 pounds.

The difficulty of obtaining food at all in Belgium is increasing daily, and the prospect of passing another Christmas in semi-starvation is inevitable.

Naturally the children will be the chief sufferers, and it is on behalf of these children that the Belgian Relief Committee is asking for a Christmas offering.

"I've been advised to read something deep. What can you recommend?" "Well, there's 'Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea.'" —Boston Transcript.

PROMPT ACTION ON CONSCRIPTION

Mr. A. J. Young Says People Expect Military Service Act Enforced

A strong plea for the enforcement of the Military Service Act is made by Mr. A. J. Young, the defeated conscriptionist Liberal candidate in North Toronto, who is also President of the Reform Association of Ontario, in a statement issued yesterday, as follows:

"The elections are over, and outside of Quebec, the electorate of Canada has declared most emphatically in favour of Union Government.

"Nothing should now stand in the way of the enforcement of the Military Service Act, and the people will expect prompt action.

"The campaign against Quebec has aroused prejudices, both racial and religious, which will be hard to allay.

"Canada must build her nationhood of the foundation of mutual respect and tolerance. Any other course will be fatal to national success and national unity.

"Personally, I have nothing to say, except that my position as an Independent Liberal was misrepresented.

"I took my stand in Nipissing as a supporter of the Military Service Act and declined the nomination when that attitude did not meet the views of the majority of those who were supporting me.

"In North Toronto I took precisely the same attitude, but it did not suit the party purposes of the Toronto newspapers to make this clear to the people. I did not expect to be successful, but hoped my attitude would do something towards holding Ontario Liberals together and preserve the identity of the party, which seemed to be in danger of being submerged.

"The people voted for ideals, and will expect a high standard of Government from the men elected. No more indecision and trifling with important issues. No special privileges to favourites. No more military scandals. No delay in sending overseas the reinforcements said to be so urgently required and proper care of the soldiers and their dependents.

"The election is over, and now every true Canadian will turn his energies to upholding the hands of the Government in every way possible to conserving our resources and helping Canada to work out the most serious problem of all — the winning of the war."

FATHER MURDERS BOY FOR THEFT OF MONEY

MONTROSE, Colo., Dec. 21.—With the very axe which her son, Joe Bush, used to kill his eleven-year-old son, Mrs. J. H. Bush, 72 years of age, slew the father while he slept on Sunday night, according to a confession Mrs. Bush made here.

The murder of the child was disclosed yesterday, when Mrs. Bush told officers Bush had killed his son because the boy had stolen a sum of money, and then had made her help boil the body in lye to hide the crime. A daughter of Mrs. Bush visited the home after the murder, and, after seeing suspicious bloodstains on the walls, reported the fact to the authorities, who began an investigation. Bush was reported first as having fled to the mountains.

Mrs. Bush, in her confession made to the coroner, says she was compelled to witness the murder of the boy, and forced to assist her son in disposing of the dismembered body. After the murder, the confession says, Bush went to his room, taking the axe he had used with him, and went to sleep.

As Bush slept the mother entered the room and killed him with the axe, disposing of his body as he had disposed of his son's.

PETERBORO' BOY TELLS OF THE HORROR OF HALIFAX EXPLOSION

The following interesting letter has been received by Mrs. Maguire, of Peterborough, from her son, Lawrence Maguire, who has been with the Canadian Army Dental Corps at Halifax for some time:

N.S. Technical College,
Halifax, N.S., Dec. 16, 1917.

Dear Mother,—This is the very first time I've been able to sit down to write. As you know, the explosion took place at 9.5 a.m., 6th December. I was just finishing my breakfast, and the window came in all over me and my breakfast.

The right side of my face and my right hand were cut in half a dozen places by small pieces of glass, much like a razor cut, about so long, — nothing at all, except that they were deep, and I had to get the pieces dug out, and they bled very freely. The morning I spent in military reporting on our own stores and helping load autos at the dockyard with dead and unconscious.

That afternoon I went to the new military hospital (Camp Hill) and worked like a slave on the wounded. I had 127 surgical dressings (mostly small) myself. Simply iodine and gauze, and generally six or seven wounds per patient. No doubt the papers have described the conditions in that particular hospital better than I can. I haven't seen them myself. The hospital contains 550 beds in four large wards, and they had something over 2,000 patients there for Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. After that they began to thin out. Their friends, etc., began to arrange to take them home.

I stayed on the job in Camp Hill until Sunday night, and at the last, in fact since Saturday afternoon, I had been helping Dr. McLellan, an eye specialist from Boston. On Sunday night I was requested to take charge of the entire Red Cross drug and hospital stores, as well as relief clothing and stuff that was sent in to the Red Cross for use and distribution. I have been on this job ever since, and I guess it is good for two weeks more.

I have some papers that I'll mail you, and I guess there will be pictures in them. Will get some anyway.

Walt's wire hasn't arrived yet, and I wish you'd send this on to him, as I'd like him to know about my activities, but cannot take time to write at length for some time yet.

Incidentally, I have two sergeants, one lance-corporal, and 28 men under me here from Montreal, Toronto, and Halifax. Quite an army for me.

Have you seen Mrs. Robertson yet? She was here on a visit to Mrs. Piers, one of my friends, and on leaving for her home in Peterborough, she said she would look you up. She used to be Vieva Hunter, of the West-end, a niece, I think, of J. R. Stratton. Well, if you see her, tell her I'm here at the Red Cross, with Mrs. Piers and Mrs. Sexton. I see Mrs. Piers a hundred times a day. Also say that Lieut Simpson is O.K., Lieut. Hiltz is O.K., Lieut. Seddon cut slightly, and Gunner McLellan O.K., and all in from over work.—Hastily, Lawrence.

Reports Presented At The Annual Meeting Of The Children's Aid Society

The annual meeting of the Children's Aid Society was held last evening in the City Council Chamber. An enthusiastic gathering of workers were present despite the inclemency of the weather. The reports submitted by the various officers of the Society testified to the satisfactory work accomplished by the Society during the past year. At the close of the meeting the meeting recorded its approval of the services rendered by last year's Board, which was re-elected and a number of new members added.

Mr. Walter Stocker commended the work performed by Mrs. M. Read, Matron at the Shelter, and expressed regret that the public was not more familiar with the operation of the Shelter. "It should be seen to be appreciated," said Mr. Stocker.

Mr. C. H. Penefather paid a tribute to the very able report made by Mr. G. W. Powell, Inspector for the Society.

Note.—Lack of space prevents publication of the remainder of this report. The balance will appear in tomorrow's issue.

No Truth In Rumour About Poison Serum

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

FORT WORTH, Texas, Dec. 21. — All rumours regarding the innoculation of Canadian aviators with poison serum are false and without foundation. The aviators were innoculated some weeks ago for the prevention of typhoid, with excellent results. There has never been any evidence of the working of German spies among the soldiers, or even among the industries of this section. A statement issued from the Royal Flying Corps Headquarters yesterday says there is not a serious case of sickness among the Canadian forces, and there has not been a death among the men since they came here. Only one death has occurred since the establishment of the field, one American cadet dying of pneumonia two weeks ago. The statement, issued by Lieut.-Col. Roscoe, commanding the fields, shows far less than two per cent of both Canadians and Americans have been sick since the arrival of the squadrons. Strict quarantine is maintained about the fields now, not because of sickness within, but as a preventive measure. There are no contagious diseases in the camps.

PRESENTATION TO MISS GRANT

The girls of the Domestic Shipping Room of the Bonner-Worth Company gave Miss A. Grant a surprise last night, when they met at her home on Park street and presented her with a dozen silver teaspoons. The address was read by Clarice Dicks and the presentation was made by Florrie Sanders. The address was as follows:

Dear Adeline,—We have gathered here to express to you our regret that you are leaving us. We wish you a long and happy married life and would ask you to accept this slight token of the appreciation of the esteem in which you are held by us.

(Signed)—C. Dicks, E. Wells, M. Walsh, A. Tinsworth, H. Bartlett, C. Sanders, F. Sanders, A. Penrose.

QUEBEC WILLING TO RETIRE

Resolution to This Effect Introduced in Quebec Legislature

QUEBEC, Dec. 21. — The willingness of the Province of Quebec to retire from the Confederation of Canadian Provinces is expressed in a resolution introduced in the Quebec Legislature to-day by J. N. Francoeur, member for Lotbiniere.

"Quebec is willing to retire," says the resolution, "if in the opinion of the other provinces, she is an obstacle to the union and progress of Canada."

It will be debated January 8th.

Clergyman Gives Wrong Information

Intricacies of Military Service Act in Quebec.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21. — A clergyman gave a certificate in one of the appeals against military service which came before Mr. Justice McLennan in the Superior Court here, that an applicant from Verdun was the "sole support of his mother and an invalid sister."

The evidence showed that the applicant is not the "main support" and that he has a married brother, who, according to the law in Quebec, is liable to contribute to the mother's maintenance.

The judge said he had no doubt the clergyman had issued the certificate in good faith, but he pointed out that under the law any person who gives such wrong information as cointained in the clergyman's letter is liable to imprisonment for twelve months, with or without hard labour.

Fighting In Petrograd

(Canadian Press)

PETROGRAD, Dec. 21.—Incessant fighting has occurred in many parts of Petrograd, in connection with efforts to check drunkenness and prevent the raiding of wine cellars. A mob raided one distillery, where fifteen soldiers drank themselves to death. Fifteen persons were killed and wounded when an armoured motor car attacked the distillery which was set on fire.

The fire department was prevented from extinguishing the blaze by rowdies and many persons were burned before the situation was brought under control. The streets are running with wine in many sections where soldiers are pumping wine out of cellars to prevent disorder.

DEATH DUE TO NATURAL CAUSES

A verdict of death due to natural causes was given in the case of the inquest held last night on John Anderson, of Otonabee, who died last Thursday in the Police Court.

Circumstances were such that John Anderson of this city, a nephew of the deceased, demanded an inquest. The evidence showed that the old man, who has suffered from heart failure, had fallen and, evidently struck his head in doing so, as marks were found upon his head and arm.

ANOTHER SOLDIER RETURNS FROM OVERSEAS SERVICE

B. C. CHURCH BURNED ON PASTOR'S ANNIVERSARY

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 19. — St. Stanislas Catholic Church, completed here about five years ago, was completely destroyed by fire this morning. The structure cost $500,000 and was insured for $170,000. The curate in charge, the Rev. Father Piette, was to have celebrated to-day the 25 anniversary of his ordination.

At 4.30 this morning he was called to the church by a messenger, the interior was on fire, but he managed to save the altar adornments and the various sacred vessels. Then he had to flee from the flames for his life. Two hours later the great gilded dome collapsed in spite of the efforts of the entire Fire Brigade, under Chief Tremblay. Two firemen were slightly hurt by flying glass.

Only the blackened walls remain and in many places these have collapsed. Mayor Martin was on the scene of the disaster all morning.

"IS NOT A TRUE VERDICT"

London Paper's Opinion of Election —Opposition Will be Formidable.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 18. — The London Advertiser, commenting on the election results says:

"Sir Wilfrid Laurier has not achieved victory, but will have a formidable opposition following, larger than in the campaign of 1911, the next Parliament—the thirteenth—is assembled.

"Sir Wilfrid Laurier followed the clearly-marked line of national duty, without swerving to the right or to the left, asking no man's support on selfish grounds, arousing a country from coast to coast, and facing almost single-handed, except for his partially organized army of followers, the most powerful forces ever brought to bear against a leader in any political campaign.

"The opponents of the Liberal party alone cannot tell to what lengths the machinery at their command was used. The winning party may plume itself upon a victory in the name of conscription; it will never live down this thing for which it must reproach itself.

"Union Government finds the country in a more or less receptive mood, under circumstances when a true verdict could not be recorded. Sir Roberts Borden has made his future and his fate. Let him face his problems!"

Reports Presented At The Annual Meeting Of The Children's Aid Society

Mr. E. A. Peck Was Re-elected President—Inspector's Report Reveals in a Measure the Large Amount of Detail Involved in the Operation and Maintenance of the Organization.

PERMANENT FUNDS INCREASE

PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

To the members of the Children's Aid Society:

A detail of the work done by the local Society during the year will appear in the reports of the Honorary Secretary, the Honorary Treasurer, and the Agent of the Society, and I need only deal with the work in a general way.

The Children's Protection Act was enacted by the Legislature twenty four years ago, the local Society being among the first to be established as a result of that legislation. The work in the Province has been extended until now every County and District possesses an organization working under the advice and influence of Mr. J. J. Kelso, the General Superintendent.

Through the instrumentality of the Act thousands of neglected boys and girls have been aided and have shown by their useful and honourable lives that this help has not been in vain.

A SERIOUS STEP.

Each year about one thousand children in the Province are made wards of the Society, taken into a shelter, and ultimately placed in homes where they may be brought up under desirable influences. This, however, represents only a portion of the work accomplished. Much is done by the local agents in visiting families where the children are thought to be neglected, and in warning and advising the parents or guardians. Advice, kindly given, in many cases proves sufficient and the necessity of removing children from their homes is thus avoided. It is recognized that it is a serious step to remove children from their parents, and this is only done when warnings have been unheeded, and there would seem to be no other course. The child's future in every case should receive first consideration.

IMPORTANT DUTY.

There is no more important duty cast upon the State than that of making proper provision for the welfare of the child. An adult has the means of protecting himself, the child has not, and upon the citizens must be placed the responsibility of providing the children with protection from injury, with education, and with proper moral surroundings. The problem of the neglected child should be kept always prominently before the public and constant effort put forth to deal with the causes which tend to make the neglect of children possible. Many of the cases arising are due to intemperance of parents, immorality, want of educational facilities, want of proper housing facilities. To some extent legislation and law enforcement may assist in eradicating these causes, but the problem will never be fully solved, and must always demand vigilant attention.

The passage and enforcement of the Ontario Temperance Act should ultimately prove a considerable factor in assisting the cause.

PERMANENT FUNDS.

It is gratifying to note the interest taken in the work of this County, and which has shown itself in part by the contributions made to the funds of the Society, the permanent fund from which the interest only is taken for the work) now representing approximately $6,200.

In our Agent (Mr. Powell) we have one whose whole heart is in his work, and who shows tact, patience and capacity in dealing with the important and often complex problems he encounters in the performance of his duties.

Miss Mary Read, as Matron in charge of the Shelter, is also deserving of commendation. She devotes her time unremittingly to the physical and moral welfare of the children placed under her care.

The Society is fortunate in having the services of these officials. The important task of managing the finances of the institution is in the capable hands of Mr. Horace Walker.

The Public, too, should appreciate the important service of our Honorary Solicitor and Secretary, Mr. Wearing, who freely and without recompense, gives so much of his valuable time to the duties of his office.

A very necessary part of the work consits in providing supplies, clothing etc., for the Shelter. This has been and is attended to, principally, by a faithful band of ladies who, week by week, give their services to the cause.

—E. A. Peck.

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The appended report was presented by Mr. Joseph Wearing, Secretary-Solicitor for the Society:

I have much pleasure in submitting my second report as Secretary-Solicitor of your Society.

During the past year a number of changes have been made, and it is my opinion that a good deal of progress has been made toward making the work of the Society more effeient and more in harmony with public opinion.

The former Agent, Mr. C. A. G. Spence, decided to resign in the month of May, and Mr. George W. Powell was appointed in his place. A good deal of satisfactory pioneer work was done by Mr. Spence, and this has been continued by Mr. Powell. Since his appointment Mr. Powell has shown himself indefatigable in his work and wise in his dealings both with children and their parents. The policy of the Society has been to as much as possible remedy conditions in neglected homes, and children have only been removed from their parents as a last resort.

AT THE SHELTER.

Mrs. Mary Read has continued to discharge her duties as Matron of the Children's Shelter throughout the year with the utmost degree of capability, and has undoubtedly saved the Society a good many dollars by her diligence and economy. The children who have been in the Shelter during the year have received the greatest care and solicitude, and I would remind the public that visitors are welcome at the Shelter at any time.

It was felt in the Spring by the members of the Executive that the rules and regulations governing the admittance of children to the Shelter should be modified and systematized. A committee was appointed consisting of Mr. E. A. Peck, Rev. R. G. Peever, J. E. L. Goodwill, Joseph Wearing, Mrs. Walter Stocker, and Mrs. W. H. Gibbs and the resolutions submitted by htis committee were unanimously adopted. One of the resolutions was that the Agent shall employ all possible means in co-operation with the Executive and other persons interested to persuade those in charge of neglected children to make conditions satisfactory, and that children shall only be removed as a last resort. Another resolution was that while the Children's Shelter is not a Foundling Home or a Boarding House, it is to be understood that each case of a neglected child shall be decided on its merits, irrespective of age. All the resolutions which were adopted were made public in the month of April.

THE FINANCES.

The finances of the Society are in a very satisfactory condition; thanks to the generosity of the Councils of both Peterborough City and County, and to many citizens and to the public at large. The particulars of the finances will be found set out in the Treasurer's report. During the year the Society received the sum of $500 from the estate of the late J. W. Bennett, and $3868.61 from the estate of the late Robert Fife. This money is invested in trust and the interest only will be used for current expenses. It is expected that from time to time the Society will be remembered by citizens in their wills, and it is hoped that the day may come when the Society will be self supporting from the interest on trust funds of this kind.

A good deal of thanks is due to the ladies of the city who have worked unremittingly at the Shelter throughout the year, and especially to Mesdames Gibbs, Stocker, Evans and Howard. A number of other ladies of the city have also been generous enough to do sewing and knitting at their homes in the interests of the children.

MEDICAL SERVICE.

The Society also owes a good deal to Dr. D. C. King, who has given professional services and medicine free to the children at the Shelter throughout the year. In this must be included Drs. Scott, Morgan, Hammond, and Buchanan, who assisted Dr. King from time to time in slight operations on the children.

The Society is also very greatly indebted to Mrs. Knox and the ladies associated with her for the invaluable services which were rendered on Tag Day, and also to the clerks of the different banks who cooperated with the ladies in counting the money which was received. It is to be hoped that the public will continue to support the Society so generously on Tag Day in the years which follow.

A very joyous Christmas at the Shelter last year followed the bounteous giving of many friends of the Society. The members of the Royal Arthur Masonic Lodge attended the Shelter in a body last Christmas morning, and made the hearts of the children glad by presents which they took along with them. There will be a number of children in the Shelter this Christmas and it is hoped that they will be again remembered by their friends among the citizens.

Plotters Were Convicted Early This Morning And Given Maximum Sentence

Fines Imposed Ranged All the Way From Ten to Twenty Thousand Dollars—Men Were Charged With Setting on Foot a Military Enterprise Against the United States and Canada.

DETROIT, Dec. 22.—Albert C. Kaltschmidt who, with others, was convicted in the Federal Court early this morning on a conspiracy charge, was sentenced four hours later to four years in the Federal prison at Fort Leavenworth, and to pay a fine of $20,000. It was the maximum sentence possible under the law for a conviction under three counts against him. Mrs. Ida Neef, his sister, was sentenced to three years in the local House of Correction and fined $15,000. Fritz Neef, her husband, and Carl Schmidt and wife, Maria, were sentenced to two years at Fort Leavenworth and fined $10,000 each. Franz Respa, 70 years old, a German, was the only one of six acquitted on all three counts. He was held, however, to answer to two other indictments pending against him. The trial came to an end at 3.30 o'clock this morning after a session of the court lasting since early Friday forenoon. The jury was out more than thirteen hours, several times asking additional instructions from the court. In passing sentence Judge Arthur Tuttle pointed out that the statute under which the defendants were convicted was framed by Congress during peace times and therefore it was not possible to impose heavier penalties.

Karl Schmidt, in addressing the court before sentence was passed, expressed his appreciation of the fair treatment accorded him. The counts on which Karl Schmidt was convicted charged him with setting on foot in the United States of a military enterprise against Canada, a conspiracy to dynamite the Detroit Screw Works and a plot to destroy the St. Clair river tunnel at Port Huron.

By ARNOLD FREDERICKS

The search, although he conducted it with the utmost minuteness, was quite unproductive of results. If the woman possessed a typewriter, she had apparently made away with it. The scrap basket contained nothing but a few torn bits of paper of no value. There was no stationery on the small desk in the living room, no black sealing wax, such as had been used to make the seals. Duvall began to realize that the case against his prisoner was far from complete. Returning from a fruitless search of the bedroom, Duvall's eye fell upon the two suitcases that the woman had carried in their flight. He went over to them at once, and proceeded to open them, one after the other.

"Search them, please." He nodded to Grace.

The latter did so with the utmost care, but found nothing of an incriminating nature. The two women sat in stony silence, showing little interest in the proceedings. Duvall went over to them.

"Show me your rings," he said to Miss Norman.

The woman held out her hand.

"Take them off."

She stripped from her finger three rings. One was a gold seal with a monogram upon it, another a cheap affair set with pearls, the third a twisted gold band. None of the rings contained the mysterious death's-head seal, or could in any way have concealed it.

An examination of Miss Ford's stock of jewelry produced no better results.

"Let me see the contents of your purse," Duvall said, indicating a leather bag the Norman woman carried on her wrist.

She handed the bag over with an almost imperceptible smile. Duvall examined it but without result. The seal was not inside. Nor did Miss Ford's purse, a silver one, contain anything worthy of his notice. He handed the two back.

"Anything else that you would like to see?" Miss Norman asked with cutting irony.

Duvall walked over to the window, and looked out. It was still quite dark. The woman's assurance puzzled him. It was quite clear now that unless he could find the typewriter, the letter paper, the missing seal, and could connect this woman with them, there remained but a single way in which she could be connected with the attacks upon Miss Morton, and that would be the direct testimony of the motion-picture actress herself, concerning the woman's visit to her room. But suppose the visit had been made in disguise. It would have been simple enough to have put on a mask on entering the room and subsequently have thrown it away. And Miss Morton, frightened as she had been, might be totally unable to identify her assailant. She had covered her tracks well. Was she then to go free?

The matter of the typewriter, Duvall put aside for the moment. The woman might readily have a friend who possessed one—a hotel stenographer perhaps, who had permitted her to make use of her machine. But the seal was a matter of more importance. His examination of the several impressions had shown him that it was extremely well carved—a decidedly expensive piece of work. Of course the woman might have thrown it away during her flight, but it seemed unlikely. What had she done with it? The question was one to which he felt he must find an answer.

Again, with Grace's assistance, he examined the articles in the women's suitcases, testing the backs of hairbrushes, the contents of powder boxes, the interior of a cake of soap, a bottle of shoe blackening, but the search was as unproductive of results as before. Duvall was forced against his will, to the conclusion that the woman had made away with the seal, rather than run the risk of its being found upon her person.

"Is there anything more that you want of us?" Miss Norman asked, when he had again closed his suitcase. "If not, my friend and I would like to go." She rose as though to take her departure.

"Yes. There is one thing more. You will have to go to Mrs. Morton's hotel with me, so that her daughter may have an opportunity to identify you. But it is far too early to start now. I will send out presently, and have some breakfast brought in."

It was beginning to grow light now. Duvall suggested to Grace that she had better go out into the little kitchenette at the rear of the apartment and see if she could not find the material for preparing some coffee. He himself sat down at the little writing desk and proceeded once more to examine its varnished surface with the greatest care. He had thought if the letters had been sealed here, there would in all probability be some tiny spots of the black sealing wax upon the desk top, but he could discover nothing. Presently he heard Grace calling to him from the kitchen.

Directing Leary to keep an eye on the two women, he joined her at once.

"What is it?" he asked. "Have you discovered anything?"

"No, not exactly. But—what does that mean?"

She pointed to a candle which stood in a tiny holder on the table. "Do you notice the spots of black wax on the candlestick?"

Duvall took the candlestick up and looked at it. There were large splashes of sealing wax all over the bottom of the tin tray, not minute spots, such as might have been made by the dropping of bits of the hot wax in making a seal, but circular splotches half an inch or more in diameter, as though a great quantity of the material had been melted.

"What do you make of it?" Duvall asked.

"I don't know. Looks as though she had melted up the entire stick, for some reason or other. Possibly to destroy it."

"Hardly that. It would have been far easier to have simply thrown it out of the window. And besides the mere possession of a stick of sealing wax, black or otherwise, could not be regarded as evidence. The woman is smart, very smart and shrewd. She did not melt that wax up for nothing. I think I have an idea of her purpose, although I cannot of course be sure yet. Did you find some coffee?"

"Yes. I'll have it ready very soon. What do you make of this woman's attitude?"

"It is simple enough. She believes that she can bluff this thing out without it being possible to prove her the author of the letters. And she may be right. Certainly, unless Miss Morton can identify her, or we can discover the death's head seal in her possession, she stands a very good chance of getting away scot free."

The coffee which Grace presently brought in was drunk by the whole party in silence. Duvall seemed unusually preoccupied. His eyes scarcely left Miss Norman; he appeared to be studying her, watching her every movement, with extraordinary interest, although he strove by assuming a careless indifference, to disguise his scrutiny. Grace, who knew his methods, realized that the sealing wax in the candlestick had suggested some clue to him, which he was trying his best to work out.

At about seven o'clock Leary was sent out to fetch some breakfast. By half past eight they were ready to go to see Mrs. Morton.

Before doing so, Duvall thought it wise to call the latter up and make arrangements about their coming. He presently got Mrs. Morton on the wire.

"Good morning, Mrs. Morton. How is your daughter" he asked.

"Much better," the reply came. "Very much better. I am going to take her back to the apartment at once."

"The apartment?"

"Yes. She will be more comfortable there, and safer, too, I think. We came here on your advice so that we might escape this fearful persecution. But since the persons who have been threatening my daughter have discovered our whereabouts, I see no reason for remaining any longer. Do you?"

"No. I was going to suggest that you should return. I think I can safely assure you that there will be no recurrence of the threats."

"Why do you say that?"

"Because I think the woman who has been making them is now in my hands. I will bring her to the apartment a little later in the morning so that your daughter may identify her. Will eleven o'clock suit you?"

"Yes.. Very well."

"Then I will come at that hour. Good-by."

He hung up the receiver and turned to speak to Grace. His eyes, however, sought the figure of Miss Norman. She had not anticipated his quick scrutiny, and had for the moment ceased to be on her guard. Duvall smiled to himself. The theory which the spots of sealing wax had suggested had in that moment received an unexpected confirmation.

CHAPTER XX.

Ruth Morton had received a fearful shock the evening before, but by the morning she had recovered from the immediate effects of it, although she still felt extremely weak.

When Duvall and his little party arrived at the apartment on Fifty-seventh Street, they were received in the library by Mrs. Norton.

She greeted both Grace and Duvall cordially, but it was evident from her manner that she found the presence of the Norman woman and Miss Ford highly distasteful to her.

Duvall drew her to one side, leaving the two women in charge of Leary and Grace.

"How is your daughter now, Mrs. Morton?" he asked.

"Better, I think."

"May I see her for a few moments?"

"Yes. She is expecting you. Come this way, please. She is occupying my room at present. She still has a fear of the other one—the one she formerly used."

"I see. But she need not have it now. There will be no further trouble." He followed Mrs. Morton into her bedroom.

Ruth, looking very haggard and white, was sitting in an easy chair by the window. Duvall was amazed to note how terribly the shock of the night before had affected her.

"How do you do, Miss Morton," he said, offering his hand. "I am glad to find your almost yourself again."

The girl looked up with a faint smile.

"Thank you, Mr. Duvall. I am much better. I understand that you have found out who has been causing me all the trouble."

"I think I have. But before I go ahead I want you to give me a little assistance. Do you think you would know the woman who came to your rooms last night, in case you should see her again?"

Miss Morton shuddered.

"I—I don't know. I do not think I saw her face. It was all so very sudden——"

"Tell me about it," Duvall said. "It may help me to get at the facts. That is, if you feel able to do so."

"I think I do. What shall I tell you?"

"Well, as you know, I had been feeling rather better yesterday, and had begun to rather laugh at my fears. Mother was with me constantly, and Nora as well, and I began to feel quite cheerful again, especially as I knew that you were making splendid progress and had found the woman who had been writing me. Mother told me that you expected to arrest her before the day was over. She said your wife had been helping you, too."

Hard to Drop Meat?
All depends on what you eat as a substitute. It is a good time to study "food value." You may be eating the wrong foods, the foods that cost most and give the least nutriment. Shredded Wheat Biscuit contains more real, body-building nutriment, pound for pound, than meat, eggs or potatoes and costs much less. Two of these Biscuits with milk and a little fruit make a nourishing meal at a cost of a few cents. Make Shredded Wheat your "meat." A satisfying breakfast on which to start the day's work. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-eat. Made in Canada.

After using three boxes, I was greatly improved and twelve boxes made me well. VARNISHED GIRLS.

Stuff Put On Their Skins To Protect Them from T.N.T. Poisoning.

LONDON, Dec. 21.—The report of the Medical Research Committee shows that munition girls have had their skins varnished to prevent T.N.T. (high explosive) poisoning.

Airmen are being supplied with oxygen, and Capt. Martin Flack has invented a method of testing how high a man can fly and how the rarer air affects him. Experiments have also been made in using oxygen to lessen fatigue.

Among other medical discoveries brought about by the war is a simpler and more effective process of skin grafting.

Albert Thomas Has Power to Make and Also to Break the Cabinets of France

ALBERT THOMAS, the French Socialist, who is widely known in Canada, is the man of the hour in France. He is a strong anti-imperialist, and he appears to hold the rise and fall of governments in the hollow of his hand. The Painlevé Ministry fell because its first Minister of Foreign Affairs, Ribot, and its second Minister of Foreign Affairs, Barthou, took an imperialistic attitude on Alsace-Lorraine. The French people are ready to fight to the end for Alsace-Lorraine, but they are not ready to fight a single moment for the spoliation of Germany or for the imperialism of any of their allies, or for the mere lust of continuing the war. Both Ribot and Barthou wanted the direct annexation of Alsace-Lorraine to France; and, in addition, territorial 'guarantees' of German territory in the Saar Valley, and even the whole left bank of the Rhine.

Because of these imperialist war aims the United Socialists, under Albert Thomas, refused at the eleventh hour to enter the Painleve Cabinet when it was formed. Without the parliamentary support of the United Socialists, Painleve knew that his ministry was doomed. In order to show his sympathy with the moderate views of the common people of France, Premier Painleve, in his opening statement, declared that the war aim of France was the 'disannexation' of Alsace-Lorraine from Germany. Specifically and in political terms what 'disannexation' meant was not made clear at the time. It did produce, however, a favorable reaction in Germany, as was made manifest in a speech by the German Foreign Minister, von Kuhlmann, and by a semi-official offer of peace to France.

Albert Thomas pointed out the inconsistency between the views of Premier Painleve and those of his Minister of Foreign Affairs, Barthou. Not only was the Painleve policy of 'disannexation' disavowed, but there was added the old Briand-Domergue policy of imperialism. He declared that such a situation had never before arisen in the political life of France, and he demanded to know clearly what the war aims of France might be. Both Premier Painleve and M. Barthou promised to get together and reconcile their conflicting views. It was due to this promise that a vote of lack of confidence was not at once had. This did not prevent one Deputy, amid the general merriment and applause of the Chamber, from quietly arising to say to M. Barthou, 'Mr. Foreign Minister, M. Ribot is awaiting you at the door.'

Clemenceau's Ministry will probably only endure until the same party that defeated Painleve decides on the fall of the tiger of France. It is not impossible that Albert Thomas will become the next Premier of France. No French Government can hold once without the support of the United Socialists. Moreover the "Kienthal" or "Zimmerwald" Socialists of France—that is, those Socialists who demand that a peace conference be convened at once—are rapidly gaining in power. At the recent meeting of the Confederation of the Seine and at the General Labor Conference at Bordeaux, the minority Socialists on at least one important issue secured a majority against the majority section under Thomas.

If Thomas becomes the Premier, an enormous step will have been taken toward a democratic, people's peace. Thomas is an ardent supporter of the war for the 'disannexation' of Alsace-Lorraine, but he is a worthy successor of Jaures in his hatred of all imperialism and in his determination to help remove the ultimate causes of war.

The Welland Canal.

Construction work on the Welland Canal has been temporarily suspended by the Canadian Government, owing chiefly to lack both of funds and of men to carry on the work, according to J. L. Weller, engineer in charge of construction of the canal. Mr. Weller also says that it is doubtful whether work will be started again until conditions are once more normal.

The canal plans called for a waterway 25 feet deep in order to permit grain and ore carriers of the largest size to come down from the Upper Lakes into Lake Ontario. The canal is to extend from Port Colborne on Lake Erie to Allanburg, a point about three miles east of Port Dalhousie on Lake Ontario, its total length being 25 miles. There are to be seven lift locks, each having a lift of 46½ feet; the difference in level between the lakes being 325½ feet. The locks are to be 800 feet long and 80 feet wide in the clear, with 30 feet of water over the miter sill at extreme low water.

The width of the canal at bottom will be 200 feet, and for the present the canal reaches will be excavated to a depth of 25 feet only. But all structures are to be sunk to a depth of 30 feet so that the canal can be deepened at any time by simply dredging out the reaches. The lock walls are to be 82 feet high above the gate sills. The lock gates will be of single-leaf type and swing at a hinge on one side of the lock, a single leaf spanning the width of the lock chamber. The gates at the foot of each lock will be 83 feet in height and 88 feet in length and weigh about 1,100 tons. The valves and culverts in the walls are large and will permit of the lock being filled in eight minutes, thus facilitating the passage of boats through the canal.

The Welland Canal is to be free to the United States by treaty. The largest Canadian lake ships will deliver grain cargoes to 1,500-ton United States barges at Oswego, in the New York State Barge Canal for New York instead of to 200 and 300-ton barges as at present, and thus they will compete with the large Canadian ships, discharging into 2,000-ton barges at Prescott or Kingston for Montreal.

DO NOT LIKE DIGGING.

Our Soldiers in France Prefer to See Fighting.

According to a correspondent's report, the Canadian and Australian troops in France are more than willing to do their share of the fighting, but they seek by every means to get out of their share of the digging. This may be one reason why the Canadians have had so much of the fighting end of the struggle around Lens and elsewhere. That is the end they want.

This is undoubtedly a digging war. About all that has been won west of Galicia since the battle of the Marne has been won by digging. The Italians have set the great example of success in this direction. They have dug down mountains, or at least have dug them down far enough so that explosives have been able to finish the job. They dug their way to Gorizia. They will dig themselves over the Hermada. We may say that digging comes so natural to the Italian that he even crosses the ocean to do it. He has dug our tunnels and subways and heaped up our railway embankments. He has become past master of the art. Verily, he has his reward on the Carso. It might be a good thing when his victory is won there to move the Italian army to Flanders and let it repeat the exploit.

The Sammies may like digging better than our boys do. We cannot think that American soldiers are by nature or their history averse to the spade as a weapon of war. In the past they have done their full duty with it, digging doggedly to many victories. There was digging in the Civil War on both sides. McClellan taught the art on the peninsula—his military deficiency apparently being that although he knew how to dig, he did not know how to do anything else. And never before had there been so much digging in the history of a war as Grant, Sherman, Farragut, and Pemberton did around Vicksburg. Farragut and Sherman both tried to cut off Vicksburg by digging a canal across the peninsula in front of the city, but failed. The Confederates dug themselves in so well that Grant had to excavate mines to get at them, and succeeded so well at last that Pemberton had to surrender. Yet it was the Confederate spade which made that campaign cost Grant several thousand men. Afterward, from the Wilderness to Appomattox, Grant did his share of good digging. Petersburg was an affair of redans and redoubts, of intrenchments and abattis, of tunnels and mines. No German shell has made a much worse "crater" than that which Grant made where a Confederate fort before Petersburg had been—it was 200 feet in length, fifty feet in width, and thirty in depth, and the whole fort was annihilated. It is impossible to say that American soldiers are not traditionally diggers.

GRAIN MARKET

Thursday's excitement in the corn market died down yesterday. The lifting of the embargo on eastern shipments was followed by a definite announcement that there would be no interference with the present fixed price on corn. The fact also that cars would not be available in adequate number for prompt deliveries had a deterrent effect on the market, as buyers were scarce. Prices, therefore, eased off, closing from 1-8c to 1 1-8c lower than Thursday's closing quotations. Oats also weakened considerably, yesterday's cash being quoted 1 1-2c lower than Thursday on the C.W.'s Ontario oats steady.

CHILL STARTS COLD

WAS SICK FOUR WEEKS

JUST ABLE TO CRAWL ABOUT

Mr. Weldon T. Hawkes, Curryville, N.B., writes: "Last spring I was taken very ill with a severe cold. I got wet and it started with a chill. I was sick four weeks, and was just able to crawl about. People all said I had inflammation of the lungs, and I think I did. I told a friend to get me two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and before the first one was taken my cold and cough were broken up, and the second did its work completely. I am raising a family and I find that it is a good medicine for the children."

There is no remedy that will cure stubborn colds or coughs, the kind that won't let go, like Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

It allays the inflammation, soothes the irritation, heals the diseased mucous lining of the lungs and bronchial tubes, and rids the system completely of all the bad effects of lingering coughs and colds.

There are so many spurious "Pine" preparations on the market that you should see you get "Dr. Woods" when you ask for it.

GEN. SARRAIL IS TO BE REPLACED

ALLIED COMMANDER AT SALONIKI SUCCEEDED BY ANOTHER SAYS REPORT.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—General Sarrail, commander of the allied armies at Saloniki, has been recalled, according to newspaper announcement in Athens, says a Reuter despatch from the Greek capital under date of December 15. The successor of Gen. Sarrail in command of the Macedonian forces, it is stated, will be Gen. Guillemet.

General M. P. E. Sarrail has been identified with the Allied operations based on Saloniki since October, 1915, when he was sent to command the French expeditionary force engaged in an attempt to succor the Serbians during the Teutonic-Bulgarian drive that resulted in the overrunning of Serbian territory. When Saloniki was turned into an Allied base and active operations on the Macedonian front begun by the Entente forces, the next year Gen. Sarrail directed the united operations of the Allies and has since remained in command on this front. Gen. Sarrail's chief services previous to going to Saloniki were performed during the battle of the Marne, when he held the German Crown Prince's army in the Argonne, and prevented the investment of Verdun, and in the Dardanelles, where he commanded the French expeditionary force after Gen. Gouraud was wounded there and subsequently relieved in August, 1915.

Although there are several officers bearing the name of Guillement in the French army, it seems not improbable that the man selected to succeed Gen. Sarrail may be General Guillaumat, who commanded the French armies at Verdun during their brilliant operations last summer, when they completed the recovery of virtually all the ground that the Germans had won in their 1916 drive.

SYKES' CLERK

By SARAH BAXTER

Jeremiah Sykes was a clerk in a small store in the east till he had by saving accumulated some capital; then he went out to Colorado to become a merchant on his own account. This was years ago.

Sykes' store was located at a crossroads in a mining district in the far west, and the proprietor did a thriving business, supplying the wants of miners in a circuit of fifteen miles. He did all his work himself because he couldn't hire a clerk for less than $100 a month, and that would eat up a good share of his profits.

One day a man came into the store to buy some goods, and after settling the bill asked Sykes how he managed to handle so much business alone. Sykes told him that he should have a helper and why he didn't get one. The man suggested that he could hire a woman cheap enough, and after some conversation said he knew a woman who would be glad to work for whatever Sykes thought he could afford to pay. The merchant told him to send her along and he would see about it.

A few days after that a young woman appeared at the store, and Sykes hired her for a very small salary. He soon learned that she was as valuable to him as a man, but he did not raise her salary. Moreover, he tested her honesty by leaving cash where she could take it without being discovered, but she called his attention to it, at the same time remarking on his carelessness.

At this time a desperado called Simmons was doing a good deal of damage in the neighborhood and Sykes thought it would be better for him to hire a man instead of a woman, since he might need help if Simmons came down on him. He mentioned the matter to his clerk and she said that she could use a revolver as well as a man, and if anything happened she would prove it. Sykes was persuaded and kept her in her position, but he didn't pay her a man's wages.

Sykes' clerk became so useful to him that he gradually left one duty after another to her that he had always considered he must attend to himself, and finally he turned over to her his bookkeeping. Notwithstanding the evidence he had of her honesty, he couldn't bring himself to confide his cash to her. When a robber paid dashed into a bank or a store they threatened to kill whoever knew the safe combination unless it were given up. Sykes argued that if he alone could open the safe there would be less likelihood of loss than if another possessed it, especially if that other was a woman. He gave this to his clerk as an excuse for not entrusting her with the combination, and she admitted that it was a very wise precaution.

Sykes kept turning over his capital so steadily that there was never much cash on hand. He was always owing money for goods, and as soon as he received remittances to any considerable amount he paid it out to his creditors. One day his clerk asked him why he didn't let his creditors wait for their money instead of paying so promptly and make interest on it, adding that if he should at any time find it impossible to pay cash they would suspect something was wrong with him. Sykes was impressed with the idea and ceased paying so promptly. After that there were occasional accumulations of cash on hand.

One day Sykes was in the back of the store figuring over his cash account. His clerk was at the front dusting the shelves. It was at an hour when few persons came to the place to make purchases, and no one besides the two were in the store. A man came in, said something to the clerk, and the two walked back to where Sykes was at work. He recognized in the man the person who had recommended his clerk.

"Mornin', Mr. Sykes," he said. "How are you pleased with the young woman I sent you?"

"Very much," Sykes replied.

"He doesn't believe that women's services are worth as much as a man's," said the clerk. "I have been with him long enough for a raise, but I don't get it."

Sykes looked uncomfortable. There was something icy cold in the tone in which she said this.

"Perfectly," said Sykes, wondering what this was leading to.

"He has never trusted me with the safe combination," said the woman.

"Hasn't he? Well, I reckon he'd better pay you some back salary." With that he whipped a revolver from his hip and covered Sykes. There was a weapon in the desk on which Sykes was figuring, but he dare not attempt to get it out.

"Who are you and what do you want here?" he asked the man.

"I'm Andy Simmons, and that lady is my wife. I don't think you've treated her fair in not giving her a raise since she's been here, and I've called in to see about it. Supposin' you open the safe?"

The game that had been played on Sykes flashed upon him at once. He opened the safe while the man kept him covered, and, after the woman had gathered some $1,200 that was in it, they bound and gagged Sykes, walked out of the store leisurely, mounted horses standing at the door and galloped away.

WAS OFF WORK 4 or 5 MONTHS A YEAR WITH CONSTIPATION

If the truth were only known you would find that over one-half of the ills of life are caused by allowing the bowels to get into a constipated condition.

When the bowels become constipated the stomach gets out of order, the liver does not work properly, and then follows the violent sick headaches, the sourness of the stomach, heartburn, water brash, etc.

Keep your bowels regular by using Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills. They work on the bowels gently and naturally, and will cure the worst cases of constipation.

Mr. Sylvester Clements, Galt, Ont., writes: "I desire to express my heartfelt thanks for what Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills have done for me. I have been suffering from a bad stomach and constipation and would be off work 4 or 5 months a year. I was hardly able to be inside without getting a severe headache. I tried doctors' medicine and other remedies, but got no relief until a friend advised me to use Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills. Now I can work inside without any headaches or pain. I would not be without your remedy for anything. I write this so that anyone suffering the same as I did may use them and be cured."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c a vial at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ODD PROBLEM OF WAR

CHEESE INDUSTRY OF CANADA FACED DISASTER.

Was Threatened by a Shortage of Rennet, but Scientific Men Got to Work in Our Country and Discovered a Substitute Which Saved the Situation Before It Became Critical.

It is not generally known that through the efforts of the Department of Agriculture a disaster was averted in the cheese industry of Canada since the outbreak of the war through the discovery of a substitute for rennet. The story is an interesting one.

In the beginning of the season of 1916 the very existence of the cheese industry was seriously threatened by a shortage of rennet, the agent which has been used from the earliest times to coagulate the milk as the first step in the process of manufacturing cheese. Rennet is prepared from calves' stomachs, the supply of which has been obtained during the last thirty years principally from Bavaria, Hungary, and Russia. Supplies from these countries being entirely cut off by the war it was obvious that, unless a substitute could be found, the cheese factories would have to cease operations as soon as the stock on hand was exhausted, or until such time as farmers and butchers could be induced to save a sufficient number of the stomachs of calves slaughtered in this country. The efforts made to secure calves' stomachs in Canada were not very successful, and it soon became evident that something else must be depended on.

It had been known for some years that a pharmacopoeial preparation known as "pepsin," prepared from the stomachs of pigs, had coagulating properties similar to rennet, but it had never been used in the commercial manufacture of cheese.

Experiments were at once undertaken at the Finch Dairy Station, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Ruddick, Dairy Commissioner, in which various chemicals and different preparations of pepsin were tried, and by careful tests it was demonstrated that pepsin could be safely employed as a substitute for rennet, and that cheese made in this way were equal in quality to those made with rennet. The matter was taken up with the manufacturing chemists, and the result was that in a few weeks standard preparations, suitable for cheese-making, were put on the market, and which are now being used very extensively in the place of rennet.

The prospects for a new business in supplying rennet substitutes attracted considerable attention, and several preparations were offered to the cheese makers which were quite unsuitable for the purpose. Many chemicals will coagulate milk, but more is required than mere coagulation. There is a somewhat obscure fermentation or digestive process set up by rennet and pepsin which seems to control the ripening or curing of the cheese. The cheese maker is not in a position to determine without making a practical test whether any alleged coagulant is suitable for the purpose or not, and, as a large quantity of milk is handled daily in a cheese factory, and it is weeks before it can be determined whether the coagulant is serving the purpose or not, it is evident that the risk involved is very great.

The Dairy Commissioner advises the cheese makers not to purchase any preparation which had not been thoroughly tried by some competent person who could recommend it. The results of the tests of inferior articles were published as soon as known. In this way the reputation of Canadian cheese was protected and heavy losses averted. There was also the danger of uninformed persons attributing any defect in the quality of the cheese to the use of pepsin, and thus injuring the reputation of the Canadian product. Any alleged defects in cheese due to pepsin which were reported were followed up by the experts of the department, and in every case it was found that the defect was due to something else, or to the fact that the pepsin was not properly used. By thus proving the satisfactory character of pepsin confidence was established in a very short time.

As a precaution against an actual shortage the Minister of Agriculture authorized the Dairy Commissioner to purchase a quantity of pepsin to be sold to cheese makers at cost in cases of failure on their part to secure supplies through the regular trade channels, or in the event of any attempt being made to unduly inflate the price of pepsin. The result is that cheese makers can now secure pepsin in both liquid and powdered form at a price which, although higher than the pre-war price of rennet extract, is only about one-third the present cost of standard rennet extract.

It was thought at first that there was a slightly larger loss of fat in the whey when pepsin only was used, but further investigations and experience in the use of pepsin show that quite as good results in this respect can be obtained with pepsin as with rennet. With this last objection removed, there is no reason why cheese makers should pay high prices for rennet.

A Rose Cake.

To be able to make a rose cake was an accomplishment coveted by little girls some decades ago. The first step was to spread a layer of freshly gathered rose petals in a bowl or deep dish. A layer of brown sugar followed, then another of petals, and so on until the dish was full. Cinnamon or some other spice was sifted over the top, and the dish was covered with a plate, placed in a tin box or securely wrapped in brown paper and buried in the ground overnight. When it was withdrawn it was a toothsome morsel, dear to the heart of childhood.

CATTLE MARKET

As usual, during the week immediately preceding the Christmas holidays, cattle receipts have this week been comparatively light. While there was nothing of outstanding high-class quality, several loads of choice beef cattle came in and sold at good prices around $11.75 to $12. Several baby beef steers sold from $13 to $14. Throughout the week the market held good and firm, with the tendency higher for choice handy weight butcher, but not more than steady for the big heavy steers. A load or two of the latter class were inclined to drag a little. For the choice handy stuff here was a constant and active demand which kept prices well up to and slightly above the preceding week's levels.

Choice veal calves were uniformly strong all through the week, with prices showing slight gains.

Milch cows of good quality continue in good demand, but off quality stuff and late springers are more difficult to cash in.

The stocker and feeder trade was comparatively quiet, though prices held about steady.

Sheep and lamb receipts were light, against a strong and active demand. Prices showed steady gains.

Receipts of hogs were moderately heavy towards the latter part of the week, but the demand was always strong, and prices were firm, showing a gain of 25c to 50c over the opening prices for the week.

The Live Stock Exchange will on Monday next, at 1 p.m., at the Union Stock Yards, offer for sale by auction by the piece, the champion steer Black George, donated by the Harris Abattoir Company for the Halifax Relief Fund. It is hoped a goodly sum will be realised for such an appealing cause.

Gifts this year MUST be practical. They must echo the greater efficiency of our nation—of the home. What's the sense of conserving food and then undoing your good work by giving useless or unappropriate presents.

Electrical gifts are most practical. And surely such gifts convey the true Christmas spirit. Your ELECTRICAL gift will still be appreciated and the giver gratefully remembered for many a Christmas to come. Be practical—give something ELECTRICAL this Christmas.

AGENT'S REPORT.

The following report, also the detailed statement, were presented by Mr. G. W. Powell:

Mr. President: At the close of another year in the Society work, I wish to thank all who have assisted me in anyway in my work, but especially would mention our President, Mr. E. A. Peck, and Mr. Joseph Wearing, Secretary. I have indeed been fortunate in having such good legal advice at all times, free of cost, Chief of Police Thompson has assisted me very much in my work, both by sympathy and advice. Mrs. McElhiney and the Rev. Father Phelan both have assisted me in visiting the homes of the erring and unfortunate. My work has been to me intensely interesting, although I have had to see very much of the dark side of life. The way the unfortunate and sinful have responded to kindness and sympathy has opened up to me a new joy in the Master's service.

PLEASANT FEATURES.

Among the most pleasant features of my work has been my visits to the different wards in Peterborough County, numbering about one hundred. Since taking office I have endeavoured at all times to better the condition of all the wards under my care, both by getting an increase in wages, and in some cases removing them to other and better homes. I find that in most cases the wards have been well placed and are well cared for, and, in some cases, they are even petted. Some wards have been neglected as to schooling, and when help is scarce there is a temptation by foster parents to shorten the school term, but we are trying to make them observe the law in that respect.

My work of investigation is supposed to cover ages from 2 to 15 years but in reality I have had to look after children from one week to 20 years. One class of our community whose husbands are away, have given me considerable trouble, but in most cases they are more to be pitied than blamed. All of this class have received me kindly and listened to my words of advice.

It might be easy for one to fill up my report with illustrations of my work, but one thing I wish especially to mention is that the boys and girls under Mrs. Read's care very soon forget their old homes, and prefer to remain with us in the shelter, and do not forget to tell us so.

A FIELD DAY.

One of our boys in the summer was spirited away by his father and after several months returned a sadder but wiser boy. Now he has hired out to a farmer at $130 per year, and is contented. Another little girl got away from my care, and is in Toronto now in very bad hands, and for the present we are unable to locate her. I am proud to mention that one of our wards, a boy, passed his Entrance at 11 years of age; not a bad record for any boy. I have had no difficulty in placing out our boys at ten years or older, but boys from 5 to 8 do not go so fast; (girls are very scarce).

I have found it very difficult to publish for the public the details of my work, but still I see the need for further advertising in this way. In some of our large churches a little talk might be arranged on a stated Sunday and could be given by either our president or secretary, or we might have a field day, and address quite a number at one time. We must expect our work to increase, and added work must mean a proportionate increase in expense. All we want is the ear of the public and we will have no trouble with our income. Our Tag Day was very satisfactory, but hardly up to what I anticipated.

I would like to suggest some improvements for the consideration of the new Board. Stationary tubs should be placed at the Shelter for the convenience of the Superintendent. I also would suggest that a small dental outfit be secured and that some of our dentists be asked to look over the children's teeth, say every two months.

THE SUPERINTENDENT.

I cannot close my report without some reference to our Superintendent at the Shelter, Mrs. Read. Her work has been in every way satisfactory, and the Society is to be congratulated upon securing one so well qualified to fill the position.

Dr. King, our Medical Advisor, has done splendid work for us this year. Quite a number of operations have been performed and all have been successful. Several doctors assisted; but in all cases the work was free of cost to us.

Several of our lady helpers who have worked for years in the interest of the Society, should be made life members.

Head of Japanese Mission Tells of Success in States.

TOKIO, Dec. 18.—Viscount Kikujiro Ishii, head of the Japanese Mission which recently visited the United States, was the guest of honour at a banquet last evening, which was attended by two hundred Japanese and Americans.

Responding to the toast of the evening Viscount Ishii said:

"It affords me the keenest gratification to tell you that we bring back to all the people of Japan from all the people of America a message charged with an earnest spirit of goodwill and a sincere desire for a good understanding and friendship.

"Let there be no doubt among you as to the sincerity of the message. There was no false note in it; there was no discordant tone in the voices welcoming us. As the result of frank exchange of opinion with President Wilson and Secretary of State Lansing, we arrived at an agreement which must help America, China, and Japan.

"I confidently believe that the time will soon come when our Chinese friends will be satisfied to be partners in the new agreement which so materially contributes to strengthening the good relations, not only between America and Japan, but between Japan, America, and China."

WILL REALIZE MISTAKE.

Hon. C. J. Doherty Confident Quebec Will Accept Dominion's Decision.

MONTREAL, Dec. 18. — That the province of Quebec will now realize its mistake and loyally accept the decision of the remainder of Canada on conscription is the belief of Hon. C. J. Doherty, Minister of Justice. He further said that the Canadian people as a whole can best serve their country by showing themselves to be generous and conciliatory towards the minority in the moment of victory.

Mr. Doherty said: "The Military Service Act will, of course, continue to be firmly but fairly and justly put into operation, and so carried out will doubtless justify the signal approval which it has received at the hands of the people."

Dealing with Quebec's future, Sir Herbert Ames, victor in St. Antoine Division of Montreal, remarked:

"It is entirely up to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to keep his promise that if the question of conscription was submitted to the people and accepted, Quebec would accept it.

"The worst thing that could possibly happen would be for Laurier and his followers to assume an attitude of opposition to what is undoubtedly the verdict of the people of Canada as a whole. That would isolate our province with a vengeance."

The Christmas Message

The Announcement of the Messiah and His Appearing.

December 23, 1917—Malachi 3, 1-12; Matthew 1, 1-12.

Prophecy and fulfilment are here put side by side. The Old Testament anticipation and New Testament realisation should be compared, and the one interpreted by the other. First, we should study the prophecy in Malachi in the light of the account in Matthew 3 and Luke 3 of John the Baptist's ministry. There we shall see how perfectly Malachi's programme was worked out.

First, a messenger was to be sent to prepare the way for the Messiah. His coming was to be announced by an accredited representative of God —one whom the Jews would recognise as a prophet. The Messiah's coming was the hinge on which all human history turned. It was natural that special preparation should be made for so great an event.

Second, men were to be taught how to prepare for the Messiah. Two points are emphasised particularly. There is to be a revival of righteousness. Injustice is to be put down. God will not tolerate wrongs to the defenceless, the hireling, the fatherless, and the widow. (Malachi 3, 5.) It seems as if all the teachings of the prophets of the past were summed up in Malachi's burning words. From Amos down they had insisted that God was honoured by justice between man and man. Burnt offerings and incense were an abomination to Jehovah so long as inhumanity and oppression flourished in the land. God is honoured by righteousness, and nothing can ever be a substitute for it. Next: Malachi calls the people to the fulfilment of their duties to God. They had robbed God in withholding the tithes and offerings that were due (Verses 8-9.) There is a duty that we owe to God as well as the duties we owe to men. He works through us, honouring us with a place in the extension of His Kingdom. He provides us with the means by which this is to be done. Sacred trusts are committed to our hands, and the interests of the Kingdom depend on our fidelity. Malachi insists that, as a preparation for the Messiah's coming God's people should meet to the full their obligations to God. In this nothing is more important than giving. The preaching of the Gospel all over the world is supported in the main on the free-will offerings of God's people. This duty should never be neglected, but all should be trained in Christian benevolence.

Malachi promises that if this be done God's richest blessings will descend on the land. Israel will become the desire of all nations. Compare this message with the teaching of John the Baptist in Matthew 3 and Luke 3 and see how the one follows the other. John began with a call to repentance. He rebuked sternly the sins of his time. He called the people to true spiritual worship. Then he pointed out Jesus as the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. (John 1, 29-34.)

In connection with the coming of Christ we remark three things. First, the sign in the heavens (verse 2). The Saviour's work had more than an earthly significance. The whole universe was concerned. To the wise men of the East the star announced the birth of the Deliverer. The watching shepherds heard the angels sing. When Christ was baptised the heavens opened and God welcomed His act of consecration. When Christ died the sun hid its face and the world was shrouded in darkness. All the universe will be affected by the results of His redemption and was moved by His appearing.

The Gentile world was deeply interested, as is shown by the visit of the wise men. History testifies that here was a general expectation all over the East at this period. Thoughtful men felt that humanity had failed and that there was no hope for the race unless God intervened. When, therefore, these watchers of the heavens saw the star in the East they came to the place to which it seemed to point looking for the Divine Helper. No doubt their ideas about His functions were dim, but the gifts they brought indicate the vague outlines of their expectation. They presented Him with gold as to a king, with frankincense as to a God, and with myrrh as to one who is about to die. Their hope that this being had a significance for the world outside Israel was soon justified. From the first it was found impossible to confine the blessings of the Gospel to the Jews. (Acts 10.) Christianity means world-wide salvation, and all who will may come to Christ.

Herod was troubled at the tidings of Messiah's birth. What God meant as good news to a lost world brought anxiety to the ruler whose throne was founded on injustice, and whose power was upheld by cruelty. Christ never comes in power without disturbing the workers of iniquity. Righteousness is the preparation for His appearing, and when His throne is set up iniquity trembles and knows that its hour has come.

When we inquire into the significance of the coming of Christ this passage brings out the following truths. It means the entry of God into human life. Christ's name, Immanuel, means "God with us." Man has been alienated from God, but now God comes to man. Through Christ each person may be brought into vital relations with God. (Matt. 1, 23.)

Next, He comes to save His people from their sins. (Matt. 1, 2.) First He delivers us from the guilt of sin. Through Christ our transgressions are blotted out like a black cloud, and God reckons them against us no more. We are brought into new relations with God; we live in the sunshine of His favour. The experience of all generations testify to the reality of the pardon Christ gives. Christians are a ransomed host, and the One who died for their redemption lives for ever as leader and king.

The title given Him, "the Christ" (verse 4) claims for Him the heritage of the past. All that went before led up to His advent. The types and prophecies find their fulfilment in Him, and in Him the movements of the future take their rise. He is the centre of all things.

Above all, the coming of Christ brings new life to men. "I am come that they might have it abundantly" is His own statement of the object of His mission. (John 10, 10.) As is shown in John 3 when we believe on Him eternal life is given. John 6 adds to this the truth that Christ is the support of this new life. He is the Bread of Life sent to us from God. John 10 goes still farther, and points to Him as the Guide and the Guard of all who trust Him. It is this new life with its spiritual environment that enables men to retrieve the wretched failures of the past. Let an individual trust in Christ, no matter how black his past, and he is forgiven, purified in heart, and strengthened in character, and prepared for a pure, joyous, and useful career. The Christmas message is therefore one of hope to all—there is salvation open to every sinner who will trust in the living Christ.

Next, it means new hope for society. When individuals are thus renewed and equipped by the grace of God, they go forth to establish His Kingdom in their world. A new social justice is possible only through the efforts of regenerated individuals The success against overwhelming odds of men like Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah shows what men of God can do in the worst of circumstances and with the most meagre resources. God's way of changing the world is the same now as then, only we have new power through Christ. The awful results of war have clouded our belief in the possibility of success, but the clouds will soon break and it will be seen that through the sacrifices and struggles of our heroes a great wrong has been redressed, and a new era brought in for our race. As yet we cannot behold the light, but when the day breaks it will be seen that the Christmas promise has again been fulfilled in a new life for men.

PRESS COMMENT ON FALL OF JERUSALEM

"Has Great Significance."

Springfield Republican: "While the immediate importance of the capture of Jerusalem should not be overrated, it is considerable, and in the larger view which includes the settlements to be made after the war the campaign in Palestine has great significance."

"Another Obstacle."

Pittsburg Gazette Times: "Taking Jerusalem, Christians may discern an omen of Divine approval of the cause they represent and be encouraged. But considering this success merely as a military achievement it is of importance as establishing the supremacy of the British over the German Turkish combination, presaging the collapse of the Turks and adding another insurmountable obstacle to the accomplishment of the pan-German territorial scheme."

"For Good and All."

Baltimore News: "Jerusalem has passed from Moslem hands for good and all. Its occupation by Christian troops is one of the great events of the war, regardless of the military value of its capture. Politically its return to Turkey would be of small moment to Germany, even in the case of a clear-cut victory, for if the Suez Canal could not be reached in this war it never can be reached again."

"Transformation Is Certain."

Troy Times: "Volumes have been written dealing with the Holy Land and with Jerusalem, which figure in stupendous history, sacred and secular. The city has been ruled by Assyrians, Babylonians, Persians, Egyptians and Romans, and last and worst by Turks. The history of the past there may now be added more glorious and satisfactory chapters. If possession can be retained by the British a great transformation is certain."

"Cannot Be Overestimated."

Boston Post: "The capture of the ancient city of Jerusalem by the British forces is an achievement of profound moment both on the military and the sentimental side.

"Nothing could be more attuned to the psychological moment than the redemption of Jerusalem at the very threshold of the Christmas season. As a maker and unmaker of morale its influence cannot be overestimated."

"Will Be Welcomed."

Hartford Courant: "Jerusalem has passed from the hands of the Turks to the hands of the British. The news will be welcomed by Jew and Christian alike. To the Christian it means that the holy city will no longer be in the control of the unfriendly Moslem, and to the Jew it means the realization of the hopes of Zionism. It is now almost certain that the Jews are soon to have a land which they can call their own. The capture of Jerusalem is the culmination of as brilliant and dashing a campaign as any operation in connection with the war."

LONDON, Dec. 20.— The Board of Agriculture finds there are in the hand of nurserymen in this county 10,000,000 forest trees which will be destroyed if they cannot be planted in the forest during the coming planting season, and to avoid such waste the board plans to train forewomen to supervise planting operations and organize gangs of women planters for landowners who desire to undertake planting operations.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Finding Out the Truth

An Engaged Couple Try to Impose on Each Other's Relatives

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

When Edith Lambert and I became engaged, on comparing notes we found that Edith had an uncle whose fortune she expected to inherit, while I had an aunt whose heir I was to be. Edith gave me the impression that her uncle was a very dignified old gentleman, whose ideas concerning the man she should marry were that he should walk a chalk line. This did not indicate that my chances for pleasing the old man were very good, for, if ever a youngster was full of Old Nick, I was that youngster.

Per contra, my aunt had been in her youth a society girl, a flirt, fond of horse racing, yachting, and had even been so vicious as to play cards for money. Edith was just the reverse of this; a young woman of reserve and dignity and, withal, very religious.

Naturally it was essential that I should be acceptable to Edith's uncle and that Edith should please my aunt, for neither Edith nor I had any fortune and had both been brought up in luxury. Edith's uncle was worth $500,000 in 6 per cent bonds, while my aunt had something more than this in well rented real estate. The problem before me and my fiancee was to make her uncle believe that I was a very steady and well behaved young man, and to make my aunt think that Edith was a woman of the world.

After a long conference in which various plans were discussed we decided that we would begin with my aunt. I was to introduce Edith to her, and Edith was to put on as much sportiness as she could, though I had misgivings as to her deceiving my aunt, for it was born in Edith to be dignified, and she had no sympathy whatever with that license which pertains to people of the gay world. However, it was arranged that my aunt was to call on my fiancee, after which we three were to pass an evening together at my aunt's house.

The evening after this call I went to see Edith and found her in a very distressed state of mind.

"Why did you tell me that Miss Martindale was a woman of the world?" she said. "I commenced soon after she appeared to talk freely and kept it up, while she listened to me without betraying any sympathy with the ideas I expressed, and she finally arose, evidently very much disgusted with me, and took her departure."

"What did you say?"

"Why, I began by cracking jokes about our forthcoming marriage, saying that I hoped when you were out late at poker parties your companions wouldn't have to set you up against the front door and ring the bell."

"What did she say to that?"

"Why, she scowled."

"What else did you say?"

"I said I had lost $500 on the last races and expected to make it up at the meet next week. Then I said I hoped you wouldn't feel that you must be tied down to me all the while. You were welcome to flirt with other women and get yourself talked about all you liked, provided there was nothing criminal in it. 'As for me, while I could get on with one husband, I must have attention from other men.' She looked at me as if she would bite my head off and whisked away without even saying goodby."

"Perhaps it was because you said it all instead of doing it. Aunt Kate was probably shocked at the bare statement, while she would not have minded the acts mentioned."

"I am afraid you don't understand your aunt. At any rate, I have antagonized her, and I think you'll find that if you marry me she will not leave you a cent of her money."

I went straight to my aunt to hear what she had to say about the matter, but she locked her tongue and would give me no satisfaction. I judged, however, that she had not been overpleased with my fiancee. Doubtless Edith had overdone the matter.

The next thing to be done was for me to make the acquaintance of Mr. Springer, Edith's wealthy uncle. He wrote Edith that I was to stay with him at his house and desired her to inform him what train I would come on, that he might send his car to the station for me. She gave him the desired information, and one bright morning I boarded the train, resolved to make a better impression on Edith's uncle than she had made on my aunt. One thing I determined to guard against—that was, overdoing it.

I had not been long on the train when a gentleman asked me if I would make one of four to play whist. Glad to while away the time, I consented. I was the partner of the gentleman who invited me to play, and the stake, beginning at a quarter a corner, was gradually increased to a dollar. But our antagonists got the idea that I and my partner were a pair of professional gamblers who were intending to "do" them and soon retired from the game.

This threw my partner and myself together, he assuming considerable bonhomie. He had a flask with him and invited me to join him in emptying it. I hesitated, fearing that when I met Mr. Springer in the evening he would smell my breath. But my new found friend was so urgent that I at last consented. Then he brought out some fine Havana cigars and proposed that we go into the smoking compartment of the car for a smoke. Again I objected, for if a whisky breath is bad a whisky and tobacco breath is worse. But a smoke after a drink is especially enjoyable, so again I yielded.

After our smoke my companion proposed a game of vingt et un, to which I assented, and the luck, being on my side, when the train rolled into the station where we were to alight I had taken $76 from my antagonist. He didn't complain, nor did he ask me to meet him again for his revenge, being just as cheery at the parting as he had been at the meeting.

I found Mr. Springer's car at the station and, getting in, was whisked to his home. When I arrived I was told that he was not at home, but was expected soon. I was shown to a room, where I made a toilet, taking care to use some aromatic tooth powder I had with me to destroy the odor of whisky and tobacco on my breath. I also divested myself of my traveling suit, which was saturated with tobacco smoke. Having got as well rid as possible of these telltales, I went down into the library, where I found an evening paper.

I was engrossed in the paper when, hearing a footstep, I looked up, and great was my astonishment. A man stood before me with a benign smile on his face, and who should he be but the person who had sought my acquaintance on the train and whom I had relieved of $76. He offered his hand and said:

"I'm glad to see you, my dear boy. I can tell you at once that I heartily approve of you. We can't trust one another in this world when we are warned, so I concluded to take you unawares."

"B-b-b-ut I thought you were—were a"—

"So I am in business and among women and children, but I know what a young man is, for I've been one myself. So I concluded to go back to the days of my wild oats and see you as you are, not as you would pretend to be. I'm very fond of my niece and wish her to marry a man, not a sniveling, driveling fellow who pretends to goodness while his inclinations are otherwise. I have found you perfectly honorable and you played a fair game. I'll say this, even if you did relieve me of my money. Come in to dinner."

Mr. Springer did not let me go for several days. He was not the man he had been on the train, but was no prude. He was much engrossed in business, and this did not give him time for dissipation even if he was inclined that way, and he was not so inclined. I went back to Edith with a far better report of my status with her uncle than she had given me of her status with my aunt.

I found that Aunt Kate had been called away for a few days, and I was obliged to go to Edith to be informed as to the situation. She told me that my aunt had written her a brief note, saying that on her return and mine she would be pleased to see us at her house to spend an evening. I gave Edith an account of our meeting with her uncle, at which she was much surprised.

"You men are very queer," she said.

A few days after my return I received a telephone message from Aunt Kate that I was to fetch Edith to her house for dinner and to spend the evening. On the evening in question I called for Edith, and she said that she would try to undo the impression she had made upon my aunt. I told her that she would better act herself and not try to appear to be any one else. Aunt Kate was very shrewd and not to be fooled.

We found our hostess got up in her finest costume, extremely decollete and with plenty of adornment. She gave Edith a smack and warmly pressed my hand. Curious to know why she had been so different with Edith during her call, I entered upon the subject at once.

"Edith told me she had shocked you, Aunt Kate," I said.

"Shocked me! She was trying to fool me. Do you suppose I don't know a woman of the world? Why, my dear, you could never be bad even if you tried ever so hard. Come in to dinner."

What a relief, both to me and to Edith! And how happy we were at having so successfully passed the ordeal required. But we had done nothing to further the issue. Edith's uncle and my aunt had taken pains to prevent our imposing on them to see us as we were and not as we would have pretended.

Our dinner was a most enjoyable one, but Edith and I agreed that it would have been far more delightful if we could have had her uncle with us. My aunt, who had the faculty of adapting herself to the person she was with, behaved herself remarkably well. Indeed, so circumspect was she that Edith conceived the idea that we were trying to impose upon her; that Aunt Kate had maligned herself and I had borne her out in the deception.

Another dinner we enjoyed quite as well—that was with Edith's uncle. We threatened to make a match between the two, but they had passed too far into bachelorhood and spinsterhood, so we were obliged to be content with the match between ourselves.

It appeared later that Mr. Springer had a double motive for taking the trip in order to travel with no incognito. He was getting old and wished to retire. Since he had no son to succeed him and Edith was like a daughter to him he conceived the idea of working me into the management of his business. The result was that in time I became its head.

A Gift for the Home

(Not for One Individual)

STRIPPED of all side-issues, the fight in this great war is for our HOMES. This awful conflict has taught us, as nothing else could, the value and sacredness of our homes. The Belgians and French appreciate this even more keenly, perhaps, than we do, but all Canada is awakening to the great fact that it is the homes—YOURS and your neighbors'—that hang in the balance.

And with the finer appreciation of our homes comes also a deeper sense of the duty that rests upon us to make these homes healthy, happy, useful centres of education, comfort, rest and pleasure.

And so this Christmas let us resolve to make one supreme gift to the home first, something that will be a step toward the right, and then to do what we can for individuals after.

Because close contact with actual conditions has shown us that music is the one influence that affects all alike, that anyone can understand, enjoy and benefit from, we urge that you add to your family treasures this Christmas Mr. Edison's most sublime gift to man

The NEW EDISON

DIAMOND DISC PHONOGRAPH

"The Phonograph with a Soul."

No needles to change—can be made to play any records.

This marvelous musical instrument really defies description, even as the most eloquent word-picture fails miserably to really portray the beauties of a precious voice.

But this much is true of The New Edison—it re-creates music of every kind so faultlessly that it is absolutely impossible to detect any difference between the real and Mr. Edison's re-creation. This has been proved beyond dispute by over 30 different artists who have toured the country singing and playing in unison with their own records. Over 500 of America's noted musical critics and one million music-lovers who have heard these unique concerts have admitted this voluntarily. Just grasp that fact!

Your home, this Christmas morning, and every Christmas hereafter and every day of every year, will be a better, happier place because of the influence of The New Edison.

Yet it costs but little to own one. If your do not care to pay cash, a small payment now and easy weekly or monthly sums will put this great treasure in your home while you are paying for it.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAS. SUTHERLAND)

Paul and Silas in the midst of their sufferings, lifted up their hearts in prayer to God, and the Lord was pleased, and in answer to their praise and prayer, bore testimony to their innocence, by an earthquake, the doors of the prison flew open and the prisoners' bonds were loosed. The jailer awoke out of his sleep, he saw the prison doors open, and supposed that the prisoners were fled, and then, what would become of him; he drew his sword and was going to kill himself to prevent an ignominious death, to which he was liable, and the strict charge which the magistrates gave him, concerning Paul and Silas made him conclude they would be very very severe upon him. The heathen philosophers generally allowed self-murder, but Christianity proves itself to be of God, then it keeps us to the law of our creation, obliges us to be just to our own lives, and teaches us courageously to hold them out against all temptations. Paul cried yith a loud voice, to make him hear, and to make him heed, saying, 'Do thyself no harm.' All the cautions of the word of God against sin, and all appearances of it, and approaches to it, have this tendency. Do thyself no harm, do not ruin thyself, and then none else can hurt thee. Even as to the body, we are cautioned against those sins which do harm to that. God had showed his power in binding the spirits of the prisoners, as much as in loosing their chains. The conduct of Paul and Silas with this extraordinary interposition of God in their favour was made effectual by the Holy Spirit at once to convince the jailer that they were servants of the Most High God. Convinced of his guilt in treating them wih cruelty and contempt, and of the evil of his former sins, he trembled lest he should be destroyed by Divine vengeance, yet he seems to have felt hopes of deliverance, perhaps remembering that they came to show men the way of salvation. He fell down before them to beg their pardon for the indignities he had done them, and to beg their advice as a supplicant. Converting grace changes people's language of and to good people and to good ministers, and to all thoroughly convinced of sin; the very feet of these are beautiful, who bring tidings of Christ and of his salvation; observe, how serious his injury. What must I do to be saved. 1st, his salvation is now his great concern, that lies nearest his heart, which before was furthest from his thought. Not what shall I do to be rich and great? But what shall I do to be saved. 2nd, he does not inquire concerning others what they must do, but concerning himself. It is his own precious soul that he is concerned about. Tell me what I must do, what course must I take. 3rd. He is convinced that something must be done in order to his salvation that it is not a thing of course, but a thing about which, we must strive and take plans. 4th. He is willing to do anything. Sirs put me into any way if it be but the right way, and I sure way, I will walk in it. Those who are thoroughly convinced of sin, and truly concerned about their salvation, will surrender entirely to Jesus Christ and will be glad to have Him on his own terms. 5th. He is desirious to know what he should do. We cannot know it of ourselves, but God has made it known to us by his word, has appointed his ministers to assist us in consulting the scriptures, and has promised to give his Holy Spirit to them that ask him, to be their guide in the way of salvation. They did not triumph over him though he trembled, they gave him the same directions as to others, Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. This is an example to ministers to encourage penitents; not to be hard on any for unkindness done to themselves, but to seek Christ's honour more than their own. Here is the sum of the whole gospel, the covenant of grace in a few words. Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, thou and thy house. 1st believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. We must accept of Christ as he is offered to us in the gospel and give up ourselves to be ruled and taught, and saved by him. This is the only way and a sure way to salvation. No other way of salvation than by Christ and no other way of our being saved by Christ than by believing in him and no danger of coming short, if we take this way, for it is the way which God has appointed, and he is faithful that has promised; it is to gospel which is to be preached to every creature. He that believeth shall be saved. 2nd. Thou shalt be saved not only rescued from ruin, but brought to blessedness and to eternal life. Thou though a great sinner, ye through Christ all they sins shall be for given, and thy heart shall be softened and sweetened by Christ. 3rd. Thou shalt be saved and thy house Be they ever so many, let them believe in Jesus Christ, and they shal be saved; all are welcome to Christ on the same terms. This faith doubtless included belief of the testimony concerning Jesus as the promised Messiah, and reliance on him alone for salvation. They included his house hold in this assurance, not that his faith could save them, but his example and influence might lead them to believe in Christ also. With him the would become part of the visible church, and have the benefit of the means of grace for their salvation. They then taught him and his family more thoroughly the doctrines of the gospel. The Lord so blessed the word that he was immediately softened and humbled he treated them with kindness and compassion, and professing faith in Christ, was baptized in his name. Neither he nor any of his family desired time to consider whether they should be baptized or not, nor did Paul nor Silas desire time to try their sincerity and to consider whether they should baptize them or not. The spirit of grace worked such a strong faith in them as superseded further doubt, and Paul and Silas knew by the spirit, that it was a work of God which was wrought in them so that there was no reason to hesitate. Regarding Paul and Silas with affection, the jailer brought them into his house and entertained them at his table. His trembling was turned into joy, as he believed in God with all his family, and trusted in the Divine mercy and truth, for protection and salvation. Faith produced joy; those who by faith have given up themselves to God in Christ as theirs, have great reason to rejoice. Believing we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. How wonderful are the various methods of God's grace? How unlikeable are the objects of it. Some he leads gently in the knowledge of the truth, others are plucked as brands from the burning. He shows the sovereignty of his grace and gives occasion for praises and thanksgivings. Whatever men have been, or have done to us, we should seek to prevent them from doing harm to themselves, and when they inquire what they must do to be saved, they must all be answered in the same way, 'Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.' None are thus shut out from salvation who apply for it.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES SUTHERLAND.

Labour Men To Propose Many Radical Steps

LONDON, Dec. 19.—British labour's attitude towards war and peace will be the chief subject of discussion at the seventeenth annual conference of the Labour party, beginning January 23. Advance copies of the agenda, which has just been issued, contain important side lights on what, it is believed, may prove to be a meeting of world-wide, if not revolutionary, consequence with regard to the relations between capital and labour.

Among the resolutions to be submitted is one by the British Socialist party, which says, in effect, that labour's participation in the Government has not resulted in any tangible benefits to the mass of the people. The resolution adds "that neither has the association of the labour party with the Government assured that the coming of peace will be made by the democracy rather than by capitalistic diplomacy." The document also refers to "the methods employed to remove Mr. Henderson from the War Cabinet when acting in perfect accord with the decisions of the labour party prove that participation in the Government and fidelity to the labour movement are incompatible." It will therefore, be urged by the Socialists that members of the labour party now holding office be withdrawn.

Break-Down of Old Method.

Regarding peace, the independent labour party will submit a resolution for discussion which, in part, says: "That in the opinion of this conference the war marks the breakdown of the old method of diplomacy which settled the international relations of the peoples without consulting, or even informing, them; and with statesmen who have used victories to impose terms of peace which left suspicion, hate, and resentment behind, which were followed by military alliances and armaments, and which violated the principles of self-government in order to satisfy military demands and imperialist appetites, it therefore calls upon the Government, if the sacrifice of the war have not been in vain, to provide for the direct representation of the organized democracy in every conference which discusses the condition of peace, to reject war aims which gives the war the character of an Imperialist venture, and to use its influence and authority in every possible way to remove the causes of war; to this end the conference declares that no obstacle should be put in the way of responsible representatives of labour covering the ground with a view to arriving at such understanding, as will receive the co-operative support of all the democracies, without which there can be no lasting peace."

Other resolutions to be submitted criticise the Government's handling of food supplies and urge as a remedy that distribution be made on a family basis of share and share alike."

Levy on the Wealthy.

"This conference, recognizing that the present system of financing the war has resulted in giving to the rich not only excessive profits during the war, but also a constantly increasing claim upon the national income after the war in the form of interest, calls upon the Government to impose at once a levy of 25 per cent. on the whole capital wealth of the country, to be levied on all persons in possession of more than £1,000, to be followed by further levies for the purpose of extinguishing the national debt, and compelling the rich classes to repay to the nation the wealth which they have acquired, not in return for service rendered, but as the result of an unjust and vicious economic system."

A second resolution by the same organization advocates "the complete nationalization of shipping and transport,' as well as the following:

"State purchase and control of all essential raw materials and foodstuffs.

"The fixing of maximum, but not of minimum, prices, for all essential commodities, both for the Government and for the civilian consumer.

"The complete abandonment of the policy of bounties and subsidies to capitalist producers and the substitution of a system by which production is stimulated, not by bounties, but in increased state control of agriculture and industry."

GERMANY WANTS PEACE ON THE BASIS OF STATUS QUO

Will Offer the Evacuation of Belgium and Retirement From France and Italy in Exchange For the Return of German Colonies and a Guarantee of Freedom of Commerce, It Is Stated To-day From Paris---Battle in the Streets of Petrograd

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

PARIS, December 22.—Germany's newest peace proposals, now being drafted, contemplate peace on the basis of status quo, according to special despatches printed in to-day's Matin. According to the Matin's information, Foreign Secretary Von Kuehlmann will offer the evacuation of Belgium, with "guarantees"—meaning presumably indemnities—will announce the retirement from France and Italy in exchange for the return of Germany's colonies and guarantee of freedom of commerce. The question of Turkey, it was stated, is to be left in the background in the hope of interesting England in some "trade." Bulgaria, it was stated, is insisting on the acquisition of Dobrudja, Southern Macedonia, and that part of Serbia extending as far south as Moravia. She is also asking that Roumania be put under subjection to the German economical domination. Russia and Alsace-Lorraine may be ignored in the forthcoming peace suggestions, or possibly concessions as to these two factors in peace completely refused.

(By Joseph Shaplen.)

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

STOCKHOLM, December 22.—A great battle in the streets of Petrograd was reported from the Russian capital to-day. Four army corps refused the orders of the Bolsheviki government to leave the city. The Bolsheviki sent other troops against them. The fighting was still in progress as the despatch was sent from Petrograd. Further details were not available.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

PETROGRAD, December 22.—Leon Trotzky, Bolsheviki foreign minister, in addressing the Council of Soldiers and Workmen, declared that if the German Emperor offered offensive peace terms, the Russians would fight against it.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

PETROGRAD, via London, December 22.—The discovery of a widespread plot against the Bolsheviki government was announced by the Workmen's and Soldiers' Soviet to-day. One of the plans of the revolutionaries, it was said, was to destroy discipline among the Soviet troops by organizing looting parties to steal liquor and distribute intoxicants among the soldiers.

(Special to The Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

ZURICH, December 22.—"Rectification of frontier" is the invariable phrase used by the German press in discussing Germany's demands for peace with Russia, according to copies of recent issues received here. Apparently it was this demand for Russian territory which caused the deadlock reported at Brest Litovsk.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

LONDON, December 22.—The lull on the British front continues. German raids at several points last night are the only activities reported in to-day's official communication. It follows:

"Hostile raiding parties were repulsed during the night in the neighbourhood of the Bapaume-Cambrai Road, east of Monchy-Le-Preux, and southeast of Armentieres. There is nothing further of special interest to report."

RATEPAYERS ARE ASKED TO SUPPORT DE LAVAL BY-LAW

At a meeting of the City Council held last evening, it was moved by Alderman McIntyre, and seconded by Alderman Langford,

WHEREAS, when the De Laval Company was established here a portion of the site, a strip on the north, was reserved for a street in case it should be needed in the future;

AND WHEREAS, the Company now needs a portion of this reservation to provide for its expanding business and wishes to expend at once $7,000.00 to $8,000.00 in manufacturing buildings upon it;

AND WHEREAS, Henry Hope & Sons, the only other owners of property adjoining the reservation have filed with the City a consent to 42 feet of the reservation being closed;

AND WHEREAS, the closing of the 42 feet and its use by the De Laval Company would still leave a right-of-way of 18 feet, sufficient for laying sewers and for providing for such traffic as might develop;

AND WHEREAS, the closing of this portion of the street and giving it to the Company will enable them to provide for their growing business, which has expanded largely since their factory was established here and is growing;

AND WHEREAS, it is in the interest of the City to facilitate the growth of the industry;

RESOLVED that this Council having submitted a By-law to a vote of the electors to close that part of the street and give it to the Company, wishes to strongly commend the By-law to the electors and recommend them to support the By-law by voting for it on New Year's Day.

BRITISH SHIP SAFE AFTER ALL

Canadian Press Despatch:

AN ATLANTIC PORT, Dec. 22. — The British steamship City of Naples, reported a few days ago to have been sunk by submarine torpedo off the British coast while under convoy of destroyers, arrived here to-day. It was learned the vessel was not attacked by U boat, but struck a mine, and her officers, fearing she was seriously damaged, put back to a British port. A re-examiantion of the hull proved the effect of the explosion was negligible and the ship resumed her voyage. An American vessel which was in the same convoy with the City of Naples, brought the story of the British ship's supposed sinking. The accident occurred on Dec. 5 when the fleet was five days out from port.

CANADA DRY IN SIX MONTHS EXCEPT FOR BEER

Order-in-Council Prohibiting the Importation of Liquor Into Canada Will Have a Drastic Effect Upon the Dominion

MONTREAL'S SUPPLY

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 22.—Scotch and Irish whiskeys along with imported gins, selling for half a dollar a glass over the bar within a very few weeks. Such is the prospect in view for Montrealers if the Order-in-Council mentioned in the morning papers, prohibiting the importation into Canada of liquors of all sorts, goes into effect.

For some time it had been rumoured that the Union government, with the well known prohibitionist, N. W. Rowell, as President of the Counsel, would take some action in advance of the temperance legislation of the late parliament, but no one expected it would come so soon, or in such a drastic way.

To stop the importation of liquors and to forbid the use of cereals for the manufacture of intoxicants other than beer, means that Canada will go dry for everything except beer in six months' time or less.

SIX MONTHS' SUPPLY.

Your correspondent this morning interviewed a customs official through whose hands most of the liquor that comes into Canada passes, and he stated that there is just about enough liquor in bond in Canada to supply the normal demand for six months. But as it is certain those in a position to do so will lay up supplies as speedily as possible and as much as their purses will stand, it is expected that the quantity now in hand will not last much more than three months. After that, well for those who like to indulge, it will mean taking to beer.

Importations to Canada have fallen off greatly during the past year, not so much because the demand was less, but because the ships that usually carried the stuff to Canada were otherwise engaged. In many instances wholesale houses here have been forced to supply less than half the quantity asked.

DEPENDS ON MONTREAL.

Montreal has been supplying practically the whole of Canada for many months, because the rest of Canada, or nearly all of it is dry, And when Montreal's supply runs out, the rest of Canada will have to do without. Some of the local hotels have good stores in hand. They bought heavily when the price of overseas liquors began to mount slowly when the war began and they have been adding to their stock in hand at every available opportunity. Even if they can get no more these few will be able to keep going for a year or more, with greatly increased profit to themselves, for while they bought cheaply hey will sell at the highest prices that will be demanded from now on. Scotch and Irish whiskeys have been selling over the bars here for twenty cents and in some instances for twenty-five, for many months and if, or rather, as soon as the order-in-council is signed, the price will increase at least five cents a drink. It will not be long after that another increase will be added, and so it will be kept going. Fifty cents a glass by May first is not only possible but probable, and after that those who have any will be able to command "famine" prices.

COSSACKS ONLY HOPE

BOLSHEVIKI MAY LOSE

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Russia's only hope now lies in the Cossacks. They may save her from Germany in time, said officials formerly with the United States' mission to Russia today. However, these authorities do not feel that there is any chance of military power from Russia. She is definitely wiped off the allied slates as a war asset.

The trend of events in the Ukraine, where support of the Cossacks is reported definitely under way; the upheaval in Petrograd; the growing strength of Gen. Kaledine's Cossacks—these made some observers here believe the Bolsheviki rule will be swept aside.

Whether this can be done before Trotsky and Lenine turn Russia over as a granery and store house for Germany is something no one here would predict.

BIG MAIL AT THE FRONT

(William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, Dec. 22.—Santa Claus and the British army post office practically finished the handling to-day of 193,000 sacks of Christmas mail and parcels. Santa, and the post office, did about 48,000 more mail bags full of business this year than in 1916. Every bit of mail was handled smoothly and without delay. Despite heavy snowfall the deliveries were made on time.

The army post office also had a heavy outgoing mail to handle. The Tommies' favourite gifts to those back home were handkerchiefs, lace and war souvenirs. Hundreds of shops in the French villages were literally "cleaned out" of their stocks. In addition the normal letter post of about 3,000,000 has been doubled.

COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW OF THE CIVIC ADMINISTRATION

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION ENDORSED BY CITY COUNCIL

At last night's meeting of the City Council, it was moved by Alderman Duncan, and seconded by Alderman Smith,

THAT THIS COUNCIL of the Municipality of the City of Peterborough desires to place on record, by entry in the official minutes of proceeding, its appreciation of the service given to the City, to and through the Council, by the retiring Mayor, J. J. Duffus.

This Council has noticed and approved, and such appreciation has been most heartily concurred in by citizens, of the able, fair, discreet and markedly efficient manner in which the duties of the high office have been discharged. The Incumbent of the Civic Chair has been at all times courteous and attentive, and has outside of civic duties, been most painstaking in doing everything that could be done to assist and oblige.

The sittings of the Council and of the several Committees have ever been harmonious during the last two years, a most desirable thing and one due to personal qualities of tact, good sense and a high regard for the dignity and efficiency of the Civic body as exemplified in the ability of the Chair and a decision that no friction would be permitted that personal appeal could set aside.

It is not permitted in such a resolution as this to testify, but only to indicate in general, what has been accomplished, but to note that at all times the interests of the City, in execution and in forecast for the future, in anticipation of needs to come as well as matters to be done, the Civic Chair has always been conspicuous for its good sense, fair grasp of affairs and adherence to that reasonable economy of administration that makes for the best service.

That the members of this Council offer to the retiring Mayor sincere congratulations that his term of office has been approved by the public at large, that of the long roll of Civic Chiefs his record stands as one of the very best and conspicuously among that of many who have served before. And that this Council recognizes that no man who ascends the municipal platform ever attains the ideals with which he began his term of office, that the retiring Mayor may carry with him the satisfaction of having served well and faithfully, but with a cheerful sense that the true citizen is he who is willing to make the sacrifice of time and thought and care for the benefit of the city in which he lives and whose progress and welfare he is most solicituous to forward and guard.

NOMINATIONS ON MONDAY FOR THE CIVIC ELECTIONS

Mayoralty Contest a Present Feature—Mr. Matthews Will Be Candidate For Water Commissioner

THE HOURS FOR NOMINATIONS

Municipal nominations for Mayor, Utilities Commission, and Board of Education will be received at the Council Chamber on Monday from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., and will be followed by addresses by the candidates.

The Mayoralty race is apparently confined to Ald. Duncan and Ald. Stratton.

Mr. T. F. Matthews announced this morning that he would again be a candidate for the Utilities Commission, of which he has been chairman since its establishment.

Mr. Matthews had intended to retire, but so many citizens had urged him to remain in he city's service that he had consented to be a candidate for another term. In taking this step, Mr. Matthews was impelled by the realisation that several important undertakings are unfinished. One of these is the electric sub-station that must be built as soon as possible, and for which the required sum has already been provided, and another problem is the completion of the water main system to the south-west of the city. This is steadily nearing completion, and another summer or two should find this comprehensive water service completed.

Mr. Matthews will in all probability be re-elected by acclamation, judging by the present outlook.

Board of Education.

There are five vacancies in the Board of Education to be filled by election. Messrs. Hill, Crane, and Col. Miller are retiring. Dr. Neal's term expires, and a successor to the late Dr. Burnham will have to be appointed.

Dr. Neal is expected to be a candidate. It must have been patent to the citizens that he has been an unusually valuable asset to the Board and there is no doubt of his re-election, if he decides to allow his nomination to stand.

Aldermanic Contest.

South Ward: The Co-operative Store, corner of Rubidge and Dalhousie Streets.

Centre Ward: Council Chamber.

GREAT MASSES OF GERMAN PEOPLE ARE STARVING

Agricultural Producers and Rich Residents in Towns Are However Living in Plenty Says German Socialistic Paper

MASSES ARE SUFFERING

Canadian Press Despatch:

LONDON, Dec. 22.—According to a Reuter's despatch from Amsterdam, the Vorwaerts of Berlin, in a plain-spoken attack on the system of Herr Von Waldow, the German Food Controller, declares great masses of the German people not only are hungry, but are literally starving. The paper adds that agricultural producers and rich residents in towns are living in plenty as hoarding is no longer prohibited.

Every war profiteer and millionaire says the paper, has his kitchen and cellar full of ham and bacon. The middle class takes a precarious existence, spending all it possesses on food, but forty millions of the masses are starving and are unlikely to sit silent.

We might have, within a month, an absolute catastrophe in Germany and a collapse even worse than Russia, resulting in a German defeat and loss of the war.

The Valedictory of Mayor Duffus Reveals a Careful Knowledge of Municipal Problems—A Resolution of Appreciation.

THE COAL QUESTION

At last night's special meeting of the City Council, His Worship Mayor Duffus gave a resume of the civic administration on the occasion of his valedictory address to the Council. For a number of years Mayor Duffus has served the city, and has been untiring and unselfish in his devotion to the duties imposed. The Mayor's valedictory address reads as follows:

In all likelihood this will be our final meeting and I cannot allow this Council to adjourn without expressing to you by very deep appreciation of the kind assistance you have given me during my term office. If our work has been somewhat successful and pleasant it has been your kind co-operation that has helped make it such.

I am satisfied that the different Chairmen and their Committees have done their utmost to facilitate their work. You are well aware that the major portion of the work is done in committee. Therefore the committees having worked well, accounts for success.

At the beginning of the year my earnest request was for harmony, efficiency and economy. Without harmony there is no efficiency, without efficiency there is no economy. These, gentlemen, I believe you have done your best to carry out, and let me say to you that I most thoroughly appreciate it. During the year a number of intricate problems have come up for consideration and I think in almost every instance they were successfully and satisfactorily disposed of.

I have endeavoured to give liberally of my time in the city's interest, and I am confident it has been recognized and appreciated by the people generally, as I have had hundreds of requests to remain in the public service.

It is quite natural that my interest in the city should become more and more intensified from day to day by reason of the fact that I fully realise that the city's demands are becoming more vital as time goes on; I am fully aware that next year will be the most critical in the history of the city from a municipal standpoint, and nothing would give me more pleasure than assisting in solving the problem, but my family affairs and my business interests demand my personal attention for the time being, at least.

I wish to express my appreciation of the kind consideration and encouragement the citizens generally have given me during the years I have been in public office. I wish to express the same sentiments toward the press of the city. It has been fair and at times, encouraging.

I have apreciated the very pleasant assistance rendered me on all occasions by the entire staff at the city hall, as well as that of all the other public departments in connection with the carrying on of the city's business.

One feature of municipal government which I have made a particular study of and maintained a keen interest in, is its financial aspect, and of which I have done my utmost to get indelibly impressed upon the minds of each and every member of the Council. This,t ogether with the able assistance of the Finance Chairman, has been instrumental in keeping the expenditures well within our appropriations, notwithstanding the ever-increasing cost of labour and every particle of material we had to procure for the prosecution of the city's work.

The financing of municipalities is one problem that is occupying the minds of many noted financial experts from time to time, whose opinions seem to vary so much that it is little wonder that inexperienced mu-

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, DEC. 22, 1917

THE REIGN OF MAYOR DUFFUS.

After two years of service, Mayor Duffus retires from the Chief Magistracy of Peterborough with an excellent record of administration. He has brought to the discharge of his difficult duties, industrious attention, careful and painstaking interest and tactful attitude of relation to all classes of the community. His valedictory address, found in another column of this issue is an indication of his sense of responsibility to the ratepayers, his intelligent grasp of the details of city affairs; and in this respect is simply a reflex of the interest he has given, the pains he has taken during the two years of his incumbency. He made the large knowledge he acquired of affairs that related to the various interests of Peterborough the basis of intelligent efforts to deal efficiently with them.

It is to the credit of Mayor Duffus that his interest in the effective discharge of his executive duties has not been confined to routine matters of administration. He has exercised a capable and active leadership in the stressful times in which we live; he has taken a deep interest in the development and growth of the city in all ways; and as a whole has shown an example of public spirited concern for all our interests, that constitutes a lesson in good citizenship.

Mayor Duffus retires from his high office with the respect and esteem of all classes of citizens and a well-earned appreciation of his services of both an official and personal character; and his occupancy of the position of trust he has so well filled can be regarded, not as a closed volume, but as a training to the fuller discharge of the duties of citizenship which the entire community hopes he may live many years to give.

The Examiner joins with the citizens in wishing retiring Mayor Duffus a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year—and many of them.

OUR HOME RULERS.

Christmas and conscription are important in their way, but concentration of effort upon these should not obscure the civic issues that demand our attention. We have to elect a Mayor and Aldermen, butt heir election is not the only thing we have to vote upon.

The reasonable request of the De Laval Company for a concession of land to permit of making additions to their already large group of buildings and increasing the industrial importance of Peterborough deserves, and should have, the support of the electors. The permission to use a part of an unused street, never opened, and not likely to be opened, will cost the ratepayers nothing; but will be a great benefit to an industry that wants room to grow, and add to the already large pay roll of $200,000 — equivalent to $4,000 per week the year round, added to the ready money circulating in Peterborough.

Then the people will be called to vote upon a proposed change, proposed by Alderman McIntyre, in the mode of electing aldermen, from the ward system, to the system of electing them by universal vote of the electorate.

The general-vote system applied to the election of members of the School Board, gives good service, as will probably follow its application to electing aldermen.

The election of aldermen by universal vote will give every elector a voice in selecting its governing body. At present the ratepayer has a vote for only two out of our ten aldermen. If the remainder of the aldermen have given poor service and do wrong, the electors in any particular ward haven't a word to say about bringing them to account, nor any voice in their rejection at the polls, or in promoting their re-election if, by good service in the council, they deserve re-election.

The general vote system works smoothly in the election of School Board members; and it would not be cumbersome, since under the two-years' term we have to vote for only five aldermen.

Anyway, the ratepayers should think this and other civic problems over, form matured opinions upon the several issues presented and put themselves in a position to give an intelligent and not hap-hazard vote on January 1st, 1918.

If it is true as Food Controller Hoover of the States says, that the surplus of the 1917 crop has already been sent overseas, and that what more is sent must come from food saving, why is there not more fuss made of the fact, and more direct appeal to the people?

HELP THE HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

The appeal printed in The Examiner yesterday, for practical support of the Peterborough Health Association—for help in its work, is worthy of hearty heed. Especially, is the appeal to remember the Association's need for means, in the interest of the otherwise helpless afflicted whose condition is ameliorated and lives brightened by the ministrations of the Health Association, entitled to consideration in their interest, and also the interests of the sound and healthy part of the community.

Our future prosperity, our fitness for the discharge of the duties of nationhood and citizenship, depend upon the sound health and wholesome character of the nation's population. The rejection of recruits for physical defects and impaired health, have an alarming ratio to the comparatively few found sound and physically fit. Such a ratio would not have existed if in the past generation the nation had had the benefit of the conditions the Health Association is seeking to establish.

The war has sadly thinned our population and the wastage must, as far as possible, be made good; and for this natural, normal increase of population—the rising generation—must be depended upon. To repair this wastage, there must be an end to, or decrease of, the much greater wastage from infant mortality than from war. If we allow infants to die before the age of one year and later, we thereby contribute to the waste of manhood.

This wastage of infant life is due to several causes—lack of proper care and feeding of infants, from the ignorance or restricted means or unfavourable home conditions of thousands of mothers.

To correct this ignorance, to improve the conditions and help the helpless little fighter in his battle with early death, is one of the chief functions of the Health Association. How worthy of support and help it is can only be known with fuller knowledge of the splendid work of life-saving, health-restoring and comfort-giving it is performing.

While the general work of the Association appeals to us, there is special significance of appeal in the "at home" to be given in the Empress Hotel on December 28th, in the interests of the crippled child of a serving soldier, who being provided with help to restore the use of deformed limbs—a work of real mercy and useful benefaction.

Gold that buys health can never be ill spent.—Westward Ho.

MEMORIAL MAPLES.

It's a beautiful and a thoughtful thing. The Royal Botannical Gardens, Kew, England, in cooperation with the Horticultural Department of the Experimental Farm, Ottawa, have been growing maple trees from Canadian seed, to be planted upon the graves of Canadian soldiers laid here and there—all too closely—in the soil of France. It is officially stated that some of the young memorial trees are already planted in France, and growing well.

This will constitute a new bond of union between us and our allies, a living link. The people of France will see before them memorials and reminders of the gallant Canadians who fought beside them, and fell in the same great cause. Canadian visitors in after years to the battlefields of France, will see the maples of Canada "waving above our soldier dead, their green leaves dewy with nature's tear drops," and the bond between the living, and the dead, who died for the living, and still live, will be strengthened, and gratitude for sacrifice revived.

But it is not alone in France that, outside Canadian hearts, living memorials should be planted. All over Canada thousands of maples should be planted in memory. Why should we not in Peterborough, conjoin civic beautification with remembrance of our soldier boys. Why not plant memorial maples, distinctively marked, in our public places and streets to the memory of our boys, who went forth "full of lusty life," but left their bones in the soil of France? Such memorial trees would be living centopaths, growing with time in grace and beauty and size, as reminders of our gratitude, liable otherwise to be lessened by time.

Such memorial maples would cost little, though none the less worthy for that; and would add with a beautiful significance, to the beauty of our city and the beauty of our grateful remembrance, expressed in living and growing form.

The Horticultural Society, with its new lease of life, might consider the idea of planting memorial maples in Peterborough, cultivate it a little, and take action accordingly. The planting of such memorial trees would create a new revenue for and a new interest in our trees, and might even induce our civic authorities to take a little greater official interest in the preservation and increase of our public tree life, and, consequently in the increased beauty and attractiveness of beautiful Peterborough.

The member-elect for St. Mary's division, Montreal, is preaching sedition by antagonizing conscription. The goverment cannot very consistently discipline him after allowing Bourassa to print and spout sedition for years.

Chief Thompson Receives Sheaf Of Letters From Recent Victims Of Pickpockets In Ontario Towns

The extensive operations of pickpockets throughout Ontario are revealed in the pile of letters Chief Thompson has received in reply to advertisements recently inserted in Toronto papers at the suggestion of Magistrate Dumble in an effort to find the owners of the money taken from the Boston gang at the Peterborough Fair:

"My pocket was picked by an expert," wrote an Ashburn, Ont. man, who lost $36 at the Oshawa Fair. Another farmer dropped $50 that day.

A Port Perry man lost $8 at the Lindsay fair on Sept. 22nd, and from Hamilton came a complaint of a loss of $54 in the crowd at the G.T.R. station in Hamilton.

At the Provincial Plowing match a crowd of farmers were boarding a car, and on the fringe were three or four men who were busily jostling and pushing those in front of them. This energy cost a farmer $13 and a note for $150.00, and it was not until later that he realized the purpose of the camouflage that covered the offensive against his hip pocket.

A London farmer lost $27 in the grand stand crowd at the Western Fair, and a St. Mary's citizen on Nov. 23rd was stripped of $49 at the Borden meeting held there.

It cost a Gormley, Ont. man $68 to enjoy the "greater than ever" attractions of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. He apparently had bright hopes of recovering the money for he enclosed five cents to register the letter he expected Chief Thompson would forward containg the $68.

"These letters afford some idea of the activities of pickpockets in Ontario," Chief Thompson commented, "and the public will doubtless agree that when they are apprehended they should receive no privilege or consideration. The mean, petty character of their preying on the public forfeits their right to be treated as gentlemen."

It is also extremely difficult to accomplish the arrest of pickpockets. Their dexterity covers their thefts until they have got safely away, and they ply their trade only when all the circumstances are in their favour. In view of the large number of cases that must be continually reported up and down the province, the success of Peterborough's police is all the more remarkable in contrast with the futile efforts of the police in most of the other towns in Ontario.

My opinion is that this city enjoyed far too long a time a tax rate around 15 to 17 mills. Had the then Council raised the rate to 20 mills and subsequent Councils carried on the business on more of a cash basis and issuing debentures for only large and permanent expenditures, Peterborough would not have more than a 22 or 23 mill rate to-day, notwithstanding the fact that she has recently built many beautiful schools, sidewalks, pavements, bridges, sewers, etc.

In order to give a comprehensive idea of some of the expenditure and the cause of the increase in the tax rate, I submit the following facts and figures covering a period of ten years.

The general rate on the dollar levied by the Municipality in 1907 was 17.50 mills, and the rate in 1917 was 26.30 mills. This is leaving out the Provincial war tax of one mill, which is levied by the Provincial Legislature and which the municipal officers are used by the Province for the purpose of collecting.

The increase in the general municipal rate, for municipal and school purposes, is 8.80 mills, the increase being as follows:

	1907	1917	Increase
City general rate ..	8.32	10.22	1.90
General city deben.	1.68	3.14	1.46
City's share local Improvement deben.	0.67	2.80	2.13
	10.67	16.16	5.49
Protestant Home ..		0.25	0.25
Prot. Home Deb....		.06	0.06
	10.67	16.47	5.80
Collegitee Institute.	1.35	1.90	0.55
Col. In. debentures	0.10	0.41	0.31
Public Schools	4.23	6.10	1.87
Public School Deb..	1.15	1.42	0.27
	17.50	26.30	8.80

	1907	1917	Increase
City purposes (as above) 10.67		16.16	5.41
House of Providence	6.00	0.31	0.31
	10.67	16.47	5.80
Col. Institute. . . .	1.35	1.90	0.55
Col. In. Debentures	0.10	0.41	0.31
Separate Schools . .	5.98	7.32	1.54
	18.10	26.30	8.20

The natural enquire which follows, looking at these figures is what has caused the increase. With regard to the city general rate, apart from debentures, some of the increases are: Charity, $4,025.00. There is one item under this head of $2,000.00 for indigent patients in the hospitals. A few years ago the Legislature changed the law and provided that the hospitals must not refuse patients, and that the municipalities must pay for those who could not pay for their treatment. The balance of the increase is ordinary assistance given through the Charity Board. Fire Department $12,000.00. This increase was caused by the changing from the old system of a volunteer fire brigade to a fully-paid brigade, a change which gives greater protection and resulted in a reduction in fire insurance rates. Light, $6,250.00. The constant demand for lamps on the streets, which come to the Council at nearly every meeting, and the most of which are reasonable requests, cannot all be refused, but every additional light means additional expense, for which of course the ratepayers receive the benefit. Administration of Justice (including Police Department) $12,123.50. Part of this increase is caused by the larger sum which the City has to pay the County for the expense of the Court House, Goal ,etc., which is arrived at by arbitration every five years, and also by the increased expense of the Police Department, which is entirely under the control of the Police Commissioners, and not of the Council. Streets and bridges, $4,700.00—not an extravagant increase. Then there are two new institutions which the city has to maintain and one new one to which it contributes: The Isolation Hospital $4,200.00; the Public Library, $4,500.00, and the Protestant Home $2,470.00. These items amounts to over $50,000.00 and largely explain the increase.

In regard to the rates for debentures, most of the sewers and sidewalks and all of the pavements have been constructed in the ten years. The property owners are charged with part of the cost of these works, is paid by the City as a whole. As will be seen in the foregoing table, the City's share of the cost of these local improvements account for 2.13 mills of the increase in the rate.

The increase in the rate for debentures for general City purposes is 1.46 mills. This includes new and reconstructed bridges, including the Smith Street concrete bridges; drains and general sewers in the south end, the new outfall sewer, the isolation hospital building and equipment, the construction of the incinerator, land for street extentions, debentures for the Patriotic Fund and Red Cross grants, sites for new industries, etc. I do not mention in this connection waterworks and hydro-electric debentures as they have not affected the rate.

The Board of Education is of course the administrator of the Collegiate Institute and Public Schools. But it may be out of place to point out that the Board has the new Collegiate Institute to its credit and to maintain, and three fine new Public schools in the south, east and west, as well as enlargements and improvements of the other schools. While the King Edward School in the south was erected, or its erection began in 1906, the increased expense of its maintenance has been largely added in the ten years we are considering.

Increased accommodation has been provided in the Separate Schools and they are larger and better schools than they were ten years ago.

There is another consideration that must be taken into account. The increases in the prices of materials and of wages have increased the cost of work done by the City as it has with all others. The City cannot build a sidewalk or a sewer, grade a roadway, repair a street, or remove snow, or do any work at the same cost that it did a few years ago, and the same cause makes its fire and police departments more expensive. These increased costs must effect the rate of taxation.

As to the future, so long as present conditions continue, we cannot look for reduced expenses and with further municipal grants for patriotic purposes, the expenses will increase, either by a large increase by placing the grants on the rate for the year or by a small but longer continued increase by the issue of debentures and the constant levy during the period of the debentures of interest and sinking funds.

The City is committed to some heavy necessary expenditures. A sewage disposal plant must be constructed, and the overhead bridge built over the river at Hunter street. The issue of debentures for these works, which must be made, will add to the interest and sinking fund charges very materially. As debentures that are outstanding fall due and are paid off, the present demands for these purposes will be reduced, but there are no considerable sums in debentures maturing for a few years. Only $3,000.00 fell due this year, and the amounts of debentures maturing in the next ten years are as follows:

	General	L. Imp.	P. School	Total
1919	$ 7,000.00	$ 4,410.92		$ 11,410.92
1920	34,000.00	15,374.78	$18,000.00	67,374.78
1921	29,000.00	1,445.48	10,000.00	40,445.48
1922	6,100.00	297.85		6,397.85
1923	13,800.00	4,972.29		18,772.29
1924	33,000.00			33,000.00
1925		6,026.60	6,500.00	12,526.60
1926	26,200.00	7,200.83		33,400.83
1927	25,850.00	28,122.55		53,972.55
	$174,950.00	$67,851.00	$34,500.00	$277,301.00

The Quebec Problem Is In Lime Light

(Special to the Toronto Star and The Peterborough Examiner.)

MONTREAL, Que., Dec. 22. — In both the Laurier and the Unionist ranks an effort is on foot to solve the problem of isolated French Canada. Certain Montrealers who are in the government's confidence, have been to Ottawa on this mission. It is understood that the Government, however, will allow the situation to develop further before action is taken, in the hope that a feature of this development may be a pronouncement of some sort from the Laurier party which will help to clear the way for action.

In the meantime there is a gathering of the Laurier clans in Ottawa, in which Hon. Sidney Fisher is said to be taking a leading part. A number of Sir Wilfrid's strongest supporters from Quebec province will confer with him over the week end.

It is interesting to note that Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux left for Ottawa on Friday night after a conference with Sir Lomer Gouin in Quebec city. Mr. Lemieux declares that the conference was only incidental to a visit made by him to relatives in Quebec, but his hurried departure for Ottawa would seem to indicate that he bears a message.

A patronizing attitude on the part of Ontario is the one thing needed to make the situation worse than it is.

QUEBEC'S MOOD.

Quebec on the other hand, is at present in a frame of mind which prompts it to go half way towards a reconciliation if its problems are approached in the right spirit. Mr. Lemieux may see no mandate in the election. He says, indeed, that the people were buncoed into voting as they did, but most of his compatriots in Montreal disagree with him. Intelligent Quebecers realize what has happened. Even Henri Bourassa declares that the significance of the situation is obvious. And if there are a few diehards here who profess to have no anxiety about Quebec isolation, their blindness is in contrast to the clear vision with which other Frenchmen begin to see the consequences.

Also there is one fear which is gnawing at the heart of Quebec more than any other fear that, with no French representatives in the Cabinet Quebec will not receive her share of public expenditures.

But French representation in the Cabinet there is going to be. Sir Robert Borden is allowing time for the details to work themselves out, but it is pretty well understood in Montreal that both he and Sir Wilfrid Laurier are desirous of finding a solution.

New Revelations Cause Trouble In Argentine

(By Charles P. Stewart.)

BUENOS AIRES, Dec. 22.— German owned properties under heavy guard, police reserves patrolling all the down town streets and a deep under current of hostilities against Germany by street crowds were visible evidences to-day of how Buenos Aires has been stirred by the latest Luxburg revelations. The government had prepared for demonstrations last night and rioting was quickly controlled. There were several spirited fights between the shouting anti-German mobs and the police. Threats and imprecations against President Irigoyen were openly voiced by many of the rioters, while street orators who demanded immediate war on Germany were cheered vociferously. None of the Buenos Aires newspapers have yet commented editorially on the latest chapter in Count Luxburg's career of duplicity. Members of Congress indicated their determination to force a complete explanation from President Irigoyen of the various implications in the Luxburg letters, alleging Irigoyen's extreme friendliness to Luxburg and Germany.

"Billy" Sunday Fights A German

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 21.—Before a screaming, yelling audience of thousands of men and women at the Tabernacle last night, Billy Sunday, when nearing the close of his revival here, fought a fast and furious fist fight with a German sympathizer on the platform. While the exchange of blows was about even, Billy had decidedly the better of the argument before the crowd near the platform separated the contestants.

His attack came just after the evangelist had begun a vigorous attack on the Germans and their allies in this war.

He had just said that he "didn't think God would be on the side of a dirty bunch that would stand aside and see a Turk outrage a woman."

At this point there came cries of "Look out," and "Stop him," and H. W. Beuterbaugh, a carpenter, of 119 South Prior street, pushed by the Sunday workers who were trying to keep him off the platform, and advanced threateningly on the evangelist.

BLOWS WERE STRUCK.

Turning to see the cause of the interruption, Sunday crouched like a prize fighter, and, looking like a ring general, launched an attack on the intruder. Billy led for the face and missed, and the stranger, who outweighed Billy fifty pounds at least, landed a glancing blow on the face. Then Billy countered with a heavy wallop to the chest, and the crowd was on the platform and tore the fighters apart.

The cheaper cuts of steak, fried, ground and seasoned, make excellent sandwiches. So does fried calves' liver, cold and chopped fine.

RED CROSS THANKED BY PRISONERS OF WAR FOR PARCELS RECEIVED

Local Prisoners of War Department Receives Appreciative Letters From Peterborough Boys Who Are Now in Hunland.

RED CROSS NOTES

The Peterborough Red Cross Society's Prisoners of War Department has received acknowledgments for parcels from the following men: Corp. T. L. Davis, Corp. H. S. Rogers, Pte. C. M. Drummond, Pte. F. Peace, Pte. F. H. Evans, Pte. H. Footit, Pte. H. Godfrey, Pte. H. Lawrence.

There was a letter inserted in the newspapers a while ago by friends of Pte. Fred Casson, complaining about non-arrival of the Red Cross parcels.

Pte. Cassoni s evidently receiving the parcels regularly and also asks for the Society's aid in regard to his tobacco parcels. He says: "Just a few lines to let you know I am receiving all your parcels safely through the Canadian Red Cross, London, and would like to ask you the favour if the Canadian Red Cross of Peterborough could do anything about my tobacco parcels, as it is over three months since I received one and miss them very much."

Corp. T. L. Davis, 15036, 3rd Batt., Canadian Infantry, is as follows:

Germany,

Lieut. J. Harvey Douglas, who has just come home to Toronto, after being nine months in a prison hospital in Cologne, says, "The men are in great need. He has seen them die for want of good nourishing food. Food sent to the prisoners rarely fails to reach them, he believes. He himself got all the parcels sent to him while in Germany."

The Prisoners of War Department started in April, 1915, with the modest ambition of sending a dollar parcel of food to every Canadian prisoner once a fortnight. The first list contained 150 names. There are now 2,500 men to whom it sends three ten pound parcels a fortnight, costing 10/- each. Also 8 1-2 lb.s of bread, biscuits, 200 cigarettes a fortnight and 5 lbs. of rusks a month. It also sends a "toilet" parcel occasionally and a complete outfit of clothing every six months. A "capture" parcel of clothing is sent directly the man's name is reported.

1 packet muscatels and almonds.
1 lb. tin English roast beef.
1 lb. cooked bacon and beans.
2 Wrigley's spearmint gum.
1-4 lb. tea.
1 lb. tin fresh butter.

Of course there is no reason why people should not send other forms of Christmas presents, such as books, games, etc., providing they order them through an authorized shop or through this Department.

(N. B.— There are no authorized shops in Canada.—

Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son, Strand, London, are authorized to send books, games, cards, etc., but money must be sent for payment of same.

Exchange of Prisoners.

With regard to the exchange of prisoners the Port of Exchange has at last been decided upon; a scheme came into operation last month. There are of course a very large number of prisoners who were captured during the nine months preceding the capture of any Canadians. These will all naturally have precedence. Although it has not been found necessary to send parcels of food to men who are exchanged to Switzerland, a gift of tobacco is sent once a month.

The following letter from a Canadian prisoner of war is most interesting and is copied from the Bulletin:

Sir,—I now have the pleasure of sending to you, as an escaped prisoner of war from Germany, my many thanks on behalf of myself and comrades of the internment camps, in Germany, of which I have been in several, for the assistance rendered by the Canadian Red Cross in the supply of both food and clothing, without which I am sure we should have been in a very poor plight.

I must state while a prisoner I received your parcels most regular and in good condition, the contents of which enabled us to exist, as the German rations were so poor, and afforded no nourishment whatever.

I also wish to thank all those who have and are at present carrying on the good work.

I had a pleasant surprise last week by receiving two advice cards from the Canadian Branch of the British Red Cross for parcels and a card from you. The parcels have not yet come to hand, as I have recently come on to camp from hospital, but I am anxiously expecting them. I am exceedingly obliged to you and the Red Cross for your kindness. A parcel from God's country will look pretty good here.

Canada will sure look good to me when I see it again, and there will be an awful yell when we come up the St. Lawrence. I have now celebrated my second year in uniform, and I'll be glad to put on civilian clothes again. Last time I was wounded I got picked up by your side and this time by the other one. I was foolish enough to hold my chest in the way of a bullet, and when I got it I couldn't keep it, but let it escape again through a hole in my back. Besides that, I sampled a few pieces from a couple of hand grenades, got a nasty smack on the knee and in fact so I've had mine. We have a good throat from shrapnel, and in fact made a thorough job of it. Then I lay out for 2 1-2 days before I got picked up. The result is that my chest bothers me yet, and I may have to return to hospital for awhile. Besides that I lost a good many of my friends the same day, and that ain't pleasant.

Well, the regular soldiers say that a soldier is entitled to one "grouse," many "Canucks" in this camp, and I wish you could raise from somebody an organ copy of the Canadian (Episcopal) Hymnal, and 100 of the hymn books without music. I play the organ here for Presbyterians and Church of England, and the services are much more looked forward to and enjoyed here than in ordinary life, so I try and give the boys as good music as possible.

(These have been sent.)

We are a cosmopolitan crowd here and in five minutes' walk one can hear German, French, Russian, Belgian, Serbian and English. I already know French so am improving the time by learning German and Spanish now. German I can now read, and Spanish I am just starting. In spare time the Canadians get together and talk about Canada, and we are a homesick bunch, for being a prisoner of war is not amusing. When I get back I'm going to have a real Canadian breakfast, and follow it by a dinner and follow it again by a supper, and make a perfect hog of myself. I dream about hot cakes. The only thought, and our one luxury here is thinking what we will do when we get home; where as in the trenches our minds were more occupied.

The Red Cross His Sole Legatee.

The Society has been advised by the officer in charge of Estates in the Militia Department that Private Michael Borich, No. 100897, of the 227th Battalion, killed in France, has made the Society the sole legatee of his estate, and his back pay, amounting to $18 will be paid over to the Society.

Such a gift as this from a man who could only make a cross for his signature in his will shows that the Red Cross has won for itself a place in the faith and gratitude of the men who are fighting and bleeding for Canada.

It is 175 years since "The Messiah" was first heard. It has been sung thousands of times since. Helped To Win Undying Fame For His Battalion

Chaplain of 52nd Battalion Refers to the Death of Corp. Dick Wedlock

Mrs. Wedlock, Ware street, has received the following letter in connection with the death of her husband, Corp. Dick Wedlock, formerly of the 93rd Battalion:

52nd Battalion, Canadians,
France, Nov. 15, 1917.

Dear Mrs. Wedlock,—The news of your loss has already reached you by this time. I came away on leave immediately after we came out of the action in which your husband fell. That explains the delay in writing. He was instantly killed in the attack on Passchendaele Ridge. We were in the first attack. He helped to save the day for the whole division, and make a name for his Battalion, which stands out to-day above all others in the Canadian Corps. You who love him best could not plan for him to die a grander death—if he had to die—than he has died. Those who died that day won undying fame for their battalion.

God help and comfort you in this trial hour. May we so live that we shall be worthy to meet him in that new sphere of life where now he serves.

It is very hard to part with our comrades; yet it is only by such unselfish sacrifice that peace and happiness and all future good shall come.

He is buried with his comrades in the slope of the Ridge. It was impossible without a further sacrifice of life to bring them back to the rear area. I shall see that a fitting memorial cross is erected over him and his comrades.

His personal things will be forwarded to you through official channels.

Yours sincerely,
R. W. RIDGEWAY.
Chaplain, 52nd Battalion, Canadians.

Germans Muffled Wireless Plotting With Band's Music

HONOLULU. — While the ship's band was playing lively tunes to drown out all tell-tale sounds, the wireless apparatus of the German cruiser Geier, at the time she was interned in this harbour, relayed messages between German agents in the United States and Japan in furtherance of a plot to embroil the two countries in war, according to an article published in the Star-Bulletin here.

The article, which is published with the authority of the United States Naval Intelligence Bureau, declares that the seal placed on the Geier's wireless by the American Government was broken by the Germans in order that the messages might be transmitted. This information was obained from the diary of Captain Grasshof of that vessel, the article says.

Grasshof's diary states that in November, 1914, and February, 1917, messages ordering widespread promulgation of reports that Japanese forces were to land in Mexico and German forces in Canada were handled by the Geier's wireless, the operators working night and day.

According to the diary, Count von Bernstorff, formerly German Ambassador to the United States, and Captains Boy-Ed and Van Papen, his principal aides, figured prominently in the plot.

A German secret agent known as "K-17" was said in the diary to have aided in the transmission of these messages and also to have advised the German Government regarding the time when Danish vessels would leave this and other ports. The diary hints at a plot to stir up revolts in China against the British, in furtherance of which quantities of arms were supposed to have been buried secretly in Shanghai and Manila. It also reveals supposed orders from the German Embassy at Washington following the destruction of the Lusitania to destroy German vessels in American and insular ports, as immediate war was feared. The diary states that these orders were cancelled subsequently by a certain "H.

The article says that Grasshof was court-martialed after the discovery of the diary and is now in solitary confinement pending his removal to Fort Douglas, Utah. On 4th February, 1917, the Geier was set on fire by her crew and badly damaged. Afterward she was towed to the Pacific Coast for repairs.

Long Service Members Of The Board Of Education Will Not Be Candidates For Re-election

The retirement of Mr. W. H. Hill, Mr. John Crane and Col. J. W. Miller from the Board of Education provides the first and perhaps the greatest surprise of the municipal elections. Their withdrawal from civic service upon the expiration of their respective terms on December 31st, was intimated a year ago, but the very success of their administration was regarded as the strongest assurance that they would again be candidates for the Board. This morning they announced that they would not present themselves for re-election.

Mr. Hill is the dean of the Board. He has given thirty years of continuous service, occupying practically all the committee chairmanships and that of the Board itself. For twenty years he has been chairman of the Committee on Appointments, and it is largely due to his efforts that Peterborough confidently regards its Public School and Collegiate Institute staffs as one of the most efficient in the entire Dominion. Educators who have visited the Peterborough schools have expressed their admiration of the excellent equipment, distribution and accommodation that are essential qualifications to an efficient system, but the commendation of the citizens has been expressed not only with these provisions but with the surpassing, concrete results manifested year after year in the students' examinations.

Under Mr. Hill's chairmanship the Committee on Appointments established the salary schedule which has attracted and retained the best teachers of the province. This plan demanded high scholarship which it recognized with commensurate salaries. Ability was made the sole basis of engagement and promotion, and the subsequent successes of the Peterborough Public Schools and Collegiate Institute attest the executive foresight of this policy.

Mr. Crane has been a member of the Board for sixteen years. As chairman of the Supervision Committee his work has contributed in a full measure in the gradual elevation of the schools to their present standard. His counsel always been valuable, and of special commendation has been the constant attention he has given to the details of his department, and the details are all important in the Supervision Committee's activities. Mr. Crane has been chairman of the Board and, like Mr. Hill, feels that the responsibilities of the administration should be shared by other citizens.

Colonel Miller counts ten years' service with the Board. He has distinguished himself by faithfully performing the duties assigned to him in various chairmanships, and his co-operation has counted in the efficiency that had marked the administration. These vacancies will not seriously weaken the Board by the necessary infusion of new blood, and by the consequent inexperience with the local educational problems. The retiring members may feel confident that their devoted and successful services are deeply appreciated by the citizens of Peterborough.

WHY?

(By Byron R. Newton.)

The night winds steal o'er the field of France,
Where a million dead men lie,
And a million ghastly faces there
Are mutely asking, Why?

Why are the heavens red with hate
From the cannon's angry flare?
Why must the eyes of the pitying Christ
See myriads dying there?

Why from the Alps must snow fed streams
With brave men's blood run red?
Why are the bodies of innocent babes
Strewing the ocean's bed?

Why are starvation and sorrow and pain
And terror in every clime?
Why are the souls of men cast down
With death at this Christmas time?

What's happened, O God, to your beautiful world,
Aflame with the furies of death?
What demon has banished sweet peace from the earth
And loosened hell's withering breath?

Answer, O Teuton!—the secret is thine—
For on the final judgment day
God will make you tell.

Out with your kulture of lust and blood
And rape and demon skill!
Tell us, O Hun, of the subtle joy
To crucify and kill.

Tell us, vile monster in human form,
By whom your soul was planned,
And where that soul may be at peace
By God and mortal damned!

To Have Perfect Skin Throughout the Winter

These days the face and hands need special care and attention. Strong winds, quick changes of temperature from indoors to outdoors, are severe on the skin. Their despoiling effects are best overcome by the application of pure mercolized wax. This keeps skin and pores in a cleanly condition, the complexion beautifully white and spotless. Chapped, reddened, blotchy and roughened cuticle are actually absorbed by it. One ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is sufficient to completely renovate a weather-beaten complexion. It is used like cold cream, allowed to remain on over night, and washed off in the morning.

As the skin tends to expand in a warm atmosphere, cheeks and chin to sag and wrinkles to form, a good astringent lotion should be used by the woman who keeps pretty much indoors these days. Dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint witch hazel. Bathe the face in this mornings or before going out for theatre or social affair. It is a remarkable skin tightener and wrinkle career.

Death Of Reeve Young Of Ennismore

Well Known Resident of Township Passed Away This Morning

His host of friends in Ennismore and throughout the district will be shocked to learn of the death this morning, after a short illness, of Mr. John Young, Reeve of Ennismore, at the family residence, Lot 7, Concession 6.

The deceased, who was sixty-four years of age, was born in the township of Smith, but had lived most of his life in Ennismore, and was well known and highly respected. He was elected reeve of the township at the municipal election last January, and previously had been a member of the Council on many occasions, and had also filled the Reeve's chair.

The late John Young is survived by his wife and by four sons and six daughters. The sons are Francis, John, and Michael of Ennismore and Cecil of the Toronto Dental College, while the daughters are Mrs. William Young, Ennismore, Mrs. Francis Cavanagh, Ennismore, Miss Clara, Miss Monica, and Miss Bernardine at home, and Miss Anna of Detroit, Mich.

In addition, three brothers, Messrs. Samuel and Frank Young of Ennismore and Patrick Young of Minneapolis, and two sisters, Mrs. Cornelius O'Connor of Ennismore and Mrs. M. Gallivan of Western Canada are left to mourn his death.

The funeral will take place on Monday morning at 9 o'clock from the family residence to St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, and thence to St. Martin's Cemetery for interment.

KITCHENER TEACHERS TENDER RESIGNATIONS

KITCHENER, Dec. 22.—The Public School Board on Wednesday received the resignation of two valuable and efficient Principals, Messrs. Otto G. Smith, of the King Edward School, and P. Fischer, of the Courtland Avenue school. Both of the Principals asked to be relieved of their duties immediately, having accepted more lucrative positions outside of the profession.

Dogs Must Not Run At Large

At the requiem service of the City Council held last evening, a deputation, consisting of Dr. C. T. Amys, M.H.O., and Dr. Fortune, was present to impress upon the aldermen the serious condition arising from cuts running at large probably infected with rabies, and to advise more drastic measures in suppressing the menace. One new case has been reported since six weeks ago, and the dog's head sent to Ottawa.

After considerable discussion, in which the Mayor expressed his opinion that one life is more than all the dogs in the province, a by-law was passed, absolutely prohibiting dogs to run at large and to be allowed on the street only when muzzled and on a leash. A heavy penalty will be inflicted for failure to comply with the by-law.

DRIED FISH DAMAGED.

Newfoundland Stocks in Oporto Suffered in Riots.

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld., Dec. 19.—News has been received here that large stocks of dried fish owned by Newfoundland interests were damaged in recent food riots in Oporto, Portugal. Many vessels from this port visit Oporto every year, as that city is the principal distributing point for the large exports of Newfoundland cod to Portugal. Shippers are considering steps to be taken for the recovery of the value of their property.

MOHAMMEDANS WEPT WITH JOY AT ENTRY

LONDON, Dec. 10.—W. T. Massey, British correspondent with the Palestine army, telegraphs as follows from Jerusalem:

The war has removed the Holy City from the Turks' blighting influence; but, though there was sound of a bitter clash of arms around it, no British bullet or shell was directed against its walls. The Turks were forced to withdraw by Gen. Allenby's strategy and the valour of his army. Turkish artillery fired from a position quite close to the Holy City, and enemy guns thundered from the Mount of Olives, but of our fire the inhabitants could make out nothing more than the distant rumble of guns and bursts of musketry, carried on the wings of the wind. Gen. Allenby put the sanctity of the holy sites before every other consideration.

I write this after witnessing the official entry of Gen. Allenby, his staff, and the military commanders of the detachments of French and Italian troops. It was a ceremony fully worthy of the cause for which we are fighting. There was no great pageantry of arms, no display of the pomp and circumstance of a victorious army. The commander-in-chief had a small staff guard, less than 150 all told, of allied troops. There was the quiet ceremonial of reading the proclamation of miltary law and of meeting the notables of the city and the heads of the religious bodies, and the official entry was over.

People flocked into the highway and welcomed the commander-in-chief's representative by the time immemorial method of clapping their hands, while old women and girls threw flowers and palm leaves on the road.

The flat-topped roofs and balconies held many people crying aloud a general welcome, but it was in the streets where the cosmopolitan crowd had assembled that one looked for and obtained the real feeling of all the peoples. What astonished me were cries of "Bravo!" and "Hurrah!" uttered by men who could hardly have spoken the words before. That the welcome was not artificial or manufactured I can testify, for quite close to the Joffa Gate I saw three old Mohammedans with tears of joy coursing down their cheeks. They clapped their hands, their hearts to full to utter words.

U. S. Secretary of War Thinks Germans Talking Too Much.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. — "No element in the military situation has led us to conclude that the initiative in the west has passed from the Allies to the enemy," says Mr. Baker, Secretary of war, in his weekly review of military operations made public last night and devoted largely to the German advertising of an impending offensive. "During the period of the review (week ending yesterday) the German military situation in the west has remained unchanged," the review says.

"Rumours of great preparations on the part of the Germans with a view to achieving some major strategic success in the west, continue to reach us.

"Reports of massed hostile concentrations in those sectors where the enemy proposes to break through the French front and roll back the Allied line on a broad scale, are numerous.

"The German higher command seeks peace through victory. The enemy is apparently very eager to have us believe that he is about to win such a victory.

"For the past two years the Germans have been on the defensive in the west. The bold advertising of imposing offensives on the part of the enemy, which, while in the realm of poossibility and therefore should not be neglected or overlooked, must in no wise be interpreted to mean that the increased strength of the hostile forces will result in any permanent strategic advantage to the Germans.

"Surveying the outlines of the general war strategy on all fronts, we find that both belligerents have been on the offensive during the past six months.

"The Central Powers have taken the initiative in the eastern and Italian theatres; the Allies along the major front in the west in Palestine, Mesopotamia and East Africa.

"The enemy has confined his efforts to advancing his lines along the Russian front, resulting in the capture of Riga and then by a well-conducted offensive in Italy, with the asisstance of an intensive political drive, gained a marked strategic success in this sector.

Allies Gaing Real Success.

"The Allies, in the principal theatre of operations, the west, have been able to record an almost uninterrupted series of tactical advantages, and, in spite of the concentration of a preponderant majority of the most efficient German division, have gained considerable terrain and taken a large quota of prisoners.

"In the outlying areas of Mesopotamia and Palestine the British have driven the enemy before them, and their offensive culminated during the week in the capture of Jerusalem.

"Though the capture of the Holy City cannot be held a principal military objective of the campaign, so vigorously pursued by General Allenby in this theatre, the conquest of Jerusalem will have a wide influence throughout the Turkish Empire, and will go far towards reaffirming the prestige of the Allied Powers throughout the Orient.

"Germany realizes the danger attendant upon the waning of her influence in the east and will therefore be more anxious than ever to conclude a speedy peace before the 'war map' becomes less favourable.

"The raiding of German towns of the interior, more especially the industrial centres of the Rhineland, by Allied aircraft, as reprisals for the repeated bombardment of open towns in France and Great Britain by the Germans has been successfully initiated.

"Reports of observers recently out of Germany, who were present during previous air raids, state that these raids have had a very depressing effect on the civilian population and have heightened the growing discontent among the German people, who now for the first time are being brought face to face with real war conditions.

The armistice concluded by the Russians with the enemy now includes the entire eastern front from the Baltic to the Black Sea. Negotiations are not proceeding smoothly. The German demands, as reported to us, specify, among other points the immediate opening up of channels of commercial intercourse, between Russia and Germany."

Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—The remarks made by "A Reader" in your "Voice of the People" column were truly amusing. It certainly was too bad that he should have been horrified at the way the women acted over the election. But why wouldn't we rejoice that we hadn't lost the first vote we ever had? And it isn't a case of us wanting to get our husbands over to the trenches. What we want is to help to get them out of the trenches, because he must remember that the majority of the women have their loved ones over there, right where he should be; and I think it a great pity that his wife didn't vote with us, if it would have had the effect of driving him there. Does he think we don't appreciate our husbands at home because we sent them to fight for him And when it comes to the time that women are needed to don the khaki and take the men's places, they will not be found wanting, and they won't wait for conscription either. I only hope that "A Reader's" turn to go comes very quickly, and then we can show him what we women can do. Thanking you for your valuable space.—Yours,

A Soldier's Wife.

POTATO GROWER FINED £300.

At Wisbech (England) Police Court recently, George Tansley, a large potato grower, was fined £300 on twelve counts of having sold seed potatoes at prices above the fixed price. The excess profit was £211. He pleaded that the Government had commandeered 167 tons of his potatoes at £8 per ton, while neighbours made £11 per ton on the market, yet they prosecuted him for these transactions

WEDDING BELLS

AUSTIN—TELFORD.

Trinity Methodist Church was the scene of a very pretty wedding at one o'clock this afternoon, when Florence Bertha, daughter of the late James Telford and Mrs. Telford, 658 Concession street, city, was married to Mr. Edward M. Austin, of Brooklyn, N.Y. The Rev. J. P. Wilson, D.D., performed the ceremony. The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her brother, Mr. Percy Telford, wore a lovely gown of white georgette crepe, with veil and orange blossoms, and carried white roses. She was attended by her sister, Miss Elizabeth Telford, who wore pearl grey crepe meteor, with large black hat. The groom was supported by Mr. Russell Telford, of Pembroke, cousin of the bride.

Mr. Geo. H. King, organist of the church, presided at the organ.

Among the guests from a distance were Mrs. J. P. Saunders, of Indianapolis, and Mrs. John Rothwell, of Toronto.

After the ceremony, the bridal party returned to the family residence where a dainty luncheon was served, and the happy couple left for a short trip, before returning to Brooklyn, where they will reside.

The Dry Belt Is Extended

Ontario Will Be More Acrid After April Next

Canadian Press Despatch:

OTTAWA, Dec. 22.— After Monday next the importation of liquor into Canada will be prohibited, and after April 1 shipments of liquor from wet provinces to dry provinces in Canada will also be forbidden. This is an official announcement made by Sir Robert Borden this afternoon. An Order-in-Council to this effect has been passed as a war measure. It is also announced that the manufacture in Canada will be prohibited after a date to be named later. The order effects all beverages containing more than 2 1-2 per cent. alcohol.

SPLENDID RESPONSE

Appeal For Pneumonia Jackets is Splendidly Answered

It is a cause for genuine satisfaction and heartfelt thankfulness not only to the members of the executive of the local society, but to all those interested in Red Cross work, to know that in response to the special appeal for pneumonia jackets, 180 have been made, packed and to-day shipped overseas, via St. John. In spite of the extra personal work, pertaining to the Christmas season or perhaps indeed, inspired by the Christmas spirit, last Wednesday afternoon 107 willing workers assembled in the work room of the Public Library—and on Thursday afternoon 120 responded to the appeal. Accordingly, the work advanced so rapidly that the efforts of the 30 who were present Thursday evening and the 50 Friday afternoon, were sufficient to complete the number of jackets to be shipped.

It is a fortunate coincidence that a shipment of these pneumonia jackets, which had been made in the work room before this urgent appeal had been received, is at present on the seas, so that the required 200 have actually been sent from Peterborough. However, as the serious demand makes it advisable, that the number be increased if possible, the work-room in the Library will be open next Thursday afternoon, December 27th, when it is hoped that all workers will again be present.

LEAVE QUEBEC ALONE, SAYS MONTREAL GAZETTE.

Conservative Paper Declares That Best Way to End the Present Situation.

MONTREAL, Dec. 21.—The Gazette (Conservative) to-day says editorially:

"Those outside of Quebec as well as in it who for weeks worked so hard to make the situation just what it is, as well as those who took a wiser and broader view of the situation, will do most to end the situation they pretend to deplore by leaving Quebec alone. It is big enough to care for its own case and besides its share of extremists and cranks it has just as good leaders as any other of the Provinces."

The Halifax Disaster - Interesting Scenes in England and France

General view of the Narrows at Halifax, N.S., where the explosion of the French Line steamship Mont Blanc took place. Showing a portion of the waterfront with its wrecked buildings, railway cars and tracks in the foreground, and, in the background, the Belgian relief ship Imo, which rammed the Mont Blanc, causing the explosion, beached on the Dartmouth shore, as well as the American warship which rushed to the aid of the stricken city, its commander having heard the explosion 52 miles at sea.

General view of the wrecked city of Halifax along Barrington Street, one of the most populous thoroughfares. In the area shown hundreds of houses were shaken down and the debris was consumed by fires. Scores of human beings perished here, and a blizzard that followed made the rescue work almost impossible for several days. Few persons survived the explosion at this spot, close to the waterfront.

Intensive farming on a large scale near Walton-on-Thames to supply England's needs. By the use of cloches, or bell-shaped glass coverings, shown here, it is expected that the 50,000 cauliflower plants in this field will be matured for use next spring, even before such plants are ordinarily set out.

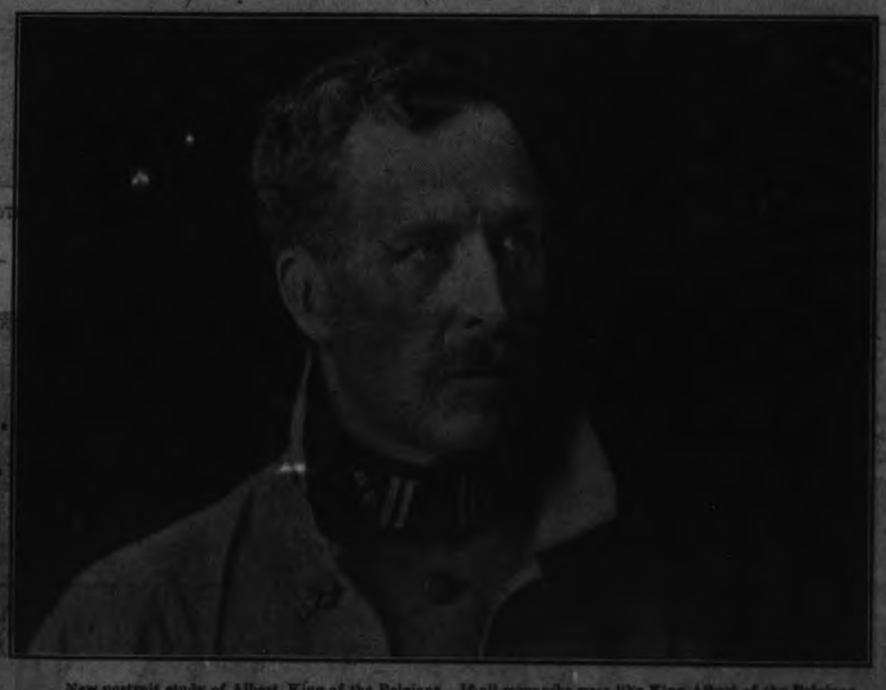
The Lord Mayor's Show of 1917. The scene at the Mansion House—two tanks steaming round to take up their position. This year the Lord Mayor's Show was distinctly military in character, quite the most popular characters in the procession being the two tanks, which Londoners now had an opportunity of seeing at close quarters.



New portrait study of Albert, King of the Belgians. If all monarchs were like King Albert of the Belgians (He is not King of Belgium) the demand for republican institutions in Europe would not be so insistent. Albert is not only a constitutional monarch, exercising his royal prerogatives only by and with the consent of the people's representatives, but he is democratic in sentiment and genuinely concerned about the people's welfare.
